House Kills Overton Plan For Capital; Vote 230-69

As a Result, Hunter, Sponsor in Lower Chamber, Says He'll Quit D. C. Committee

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

Four hours of House oratory yesterday snuffed the life out of the Overton formula.

The bill of Senator John H. Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, to put on a permanent basis the fiscal relations of the District and the Federal Government and to raise by $3,300,000 the 1942 United States payment for District municipal expenses, was killed by a 69 to 230 recorded vote.

The only manifestations of President Roosevelt's promised support of the bill were affirmative votes from House Majority Leader McCormack and House Whip Boland.

A few minutes after the vote was announced, Representative John F. Hunter Democrat), of Ohio, House sponsor of the bill, declared he soon would resign as a member of the House District Committee.

"I have tried to do something constructive for the District," Hunter declared. "This has convinced me that it is time for me to step down and give someone else a chance to see what he can do for the District."

Earlier the chairman of the District fiscal affairs subcommittee, during a presentation of the case for the formula, stated he expected the House would "perform a simple act of deserved justice to the District."

At the same time, however, Senator Overton presaged a bitter House-Senate fiscal relations controversy, with a declaration that "a study of the 1942 estimates for the District of Columbia has convinced me that the Federal payment should not be less than $10,000,000."

Overton made it clear that he has

Capper to Ask Early Hearing on Staggered Paydays

Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, last night said he would ask early hearing on his bill, introduced yesterday, to stagger pay days for 190,000 Federal employes in the District.

Describing the proposal as a "businesslike and practical way of handling" the Federal pay roll, Capper said he would ask that a special subcommittee be named to consider the bill "in the near future."

The bill would authorize the President to arrange for payment of one-half the Federal workers here on the 7th and 22d of each month, with the balance receiving their pay checks, as now, on the 15th and the last day of the month.

(A plan for five paydays a week, which is winning official favor, is described by Jerry Kluttz in The Federal Diary on Page 17.)

Bill Cunningham Now In The Post

'Has Been Indisposed'

Tomorrow's Speech Canceled; Presidential 'Chat' Set May 27

President Roosevelt yesterday canceled the address he was scheduled to deliver tomorrow night at a Pan American Union reception, but announced that he would make a "fireside chat" to the Nation May 27.

Tomorrow's address has been widely heralded in numerous circles as likely to be one of far-reaching international importance, though Administration circles had denied such a momentous talk was contemplated.

Presidential Secretary Stephen T. Early announced the change of plans, adding:

"So, despite the reports from abroad, there will be no world-shaking pronouncement from the President on Wednesday evening, as this office has told you right along."

On the record, the Pan American Union took the initiative in canceling tomorrow night's reception. The board of governors of the union adopted a resolution stating:

"The Ambassadors, Ministers and Charges D'Affaires of the republics of Latin-America, realizing that President Roosevelt has recently been indisposed and in view of the fact that the reception to be tendered would involve strain upon him, take the liberty of suggesting that the reception be postponed until such time as President Roosevelt may feel better to give them the honor of accepting their invitation."

Secretary of State Hull, who had lunched with the President, then invited the diplomats and their families to what Early said would be a "homey party" at the White House, when they will be guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and will hear the President broadcast to the Nation.

It was indicated that world-wide radio coverage of the address will be arranged.

Law Suggested To Defer Older Men in Draft

Hershey Asks Selective Service Amendment In Letter to Congress

The Nation's acting draft chief yesterday asked Congress to revise the selective service law to permit the deferment of older registrants from military service.

The suggested legislation—first Administration proposal for a change in the act—would empower President Roosevelt to defer men by age groups.

No age limits were mentioned in the proposal submitted by Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, acting draft director, but Army and Selective Service officials said that a new top age of from 27 to 30 was under consideration.

Some 5,000,000 men would be given blanket deferment, it was said, if the President were to set new age limits of 21 through 30. A maximum of 8,000,000 would be deferred under the proposed 21 through 27 age brackets.

Proposed in Letter

Gen. Hershey, in a letter to Speaker Rayburn accompanying the proposed legislation, pointed out that it would provide deferment for the older men only as long as they are not needed. The proposed bill would permit their deferred status to be revoked by the President at any time.

The matter was referred to the House Military Affairs Committee, and Chariman May declared that the members would "take our time about it." Other ranking members, however, indicated that it will be taken up within a few days.

Selective Service officials said that the proposal might be viewed as a rejection, for the present at least, of other proposals for changes in the draft act.

Revision of the minimum as well as the maximum ages for compulsory military service has been con-

Senate Unit Approves Ship Seizure Bill

Vote of 11-4 Opens Way to Convoy Debate Tomorrow

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

Legislation permitting President Roosevelt to take over for the use of this country or Britain 400,000 tons of foreign shipping in American waters was approved yesterday by the Senate Commerce Committee. The vote was 11 to 4.

The bill, passed by the House last week, is expected to reach the Senate floor tomorrow and touch off a full-dress debate on convoys.

Committee approval of the measure came after Administration supporters by a 10-6 vote rejected an amendment which would have banned the direct transfer of any Axis-owned shipping to Britain.

The amendment, similar to one defeated in the House, was proposed by Senators Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, and Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, who announced they will renew their efforts to restrict the scope of the bill when it reaches the floor.

Hull Sends Appeal

An appeal for defeat of the Vandenberg-Clark amendment was sent to the committee yesterday by Secretary of State Hull.

"The Department of State," Hull wrote, "feels it would be unwise to place a restrictive or prohibitory provision in the proposed legislation."

Meanwhile, the House Merchant Marine Committee gave its approval yesterday to sweeping legislation to set up a "priorities" system for the American shipping industry.

The bill, sponsored by Chairman Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, would authorize the Maritime Commission to control departures, destinations and cargoes of merchant vessels through issuance of warrants for priorities in loading, dis-

'We Are Committed to Victory'

'Let's Make Our Opposition Felt' At Any Cost, Knox Declares

Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox declared last night that the question of convoys is a minor one.

"The decision we have to make is far more fundamental," he said.

"We are committed to victory for the democratic forces. We must make what we do effective, or fail, and fail disastrously.

"All that America is waiting for tonight is the word to go forward. We've made our choice "to aid Britain."

Speaking before the Society of American Military Engineers at the Mayflower, the Navy Secretary charged into the question of convoys, a subject which hitherto he admittedly had sidestepped.

"It is barely possible," Knox asserted, "under modern conditions of warfare, when the danger is three-dimensional, that convoys are not the answer.

"Perhaps we have to find and develop a new defense to get the goods safely to Britain."

The United States, he pointed out, had three choices when the war broke out: Surrender to the aggressor, "Chinese-wall" isolationism, or the "use of force to scare off or defeat the aggressors." And, he added, the Nation made its choice when it amended the neutrality laws, when it passed the Lend-Lease Bill, when it moved to seize Axis shipping in American ports for the benefit of the British.

These were steps in the right direction, Knox said, but, he warned, "We can not fight half a battle." He urged:

"Let's make our opposition felt at whatever price it may mean."

Earlier in the day, the Society of American Military Engineers

Officials Seek To Halt New Strike Wave

Efforts Fail to Have Pacific Shipyards Tie-up Outlawed; G. M. Parley Today

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Confronted with the tie-up of an enormous shipbuilding program in San Francisco, a shutdown of a $3,000,000 construction project in the Boston Navy Yard and a threat of a General Motors strike on Thursday, labor and defense officials battled yesterday to stem the threat of a new wave of defense industry strikes.

Yesterday's action on the principal fronts of the war for labor peace:

1. Desperately afraid that the joint C. I. O. and A. F. of L. strike of 1,700 San Francisco machinists, which has already closed 11 shipyards with $500,000,000 of defense orders, would completely shatter the master labor standardization plan for West Coast shipbuilding, OPM officials vainly sought to have international officers of the two unions outlaw the strike as a breach of the recently negotiated contract.

2. Other OPM officials made plans for a conference today with A. F. of L. Building Trades Councilmen, 900 of whose members yesterday struck at the big Navy drydock at South Boston, Mass., tying up a $3,000,000 defense construction job. Washington officials were known to feel that the strike, reportedly in protest at the hiring of 1,200 WPA and civil service employes, was unjustified.

3. Frank in admitting that they could not forecast the probable outcome of continued negotiations with C. I. O. unionists and management of the General Motors Corporation, a panel of the National Defense Mediation Board

Soldiers, Sailors Charge Pickets At White House

A melee in front of the White House, involving peace pickets and service men, last night brought a score of police and a large crowd of home-bound theater-goers to the scene. One picket was hurt and a soldier was arrested.

Police said the fight started when 20 soldiers, sailors and marines charged the picket line that has been maintained on the Pennsylvania Avenue side of the White House since Friday at 3 p. m. by the American Peace Mobilization.

Edward Young, 25, of 1441 Euclid Street Northwest, suffered a gash to the head when he resisted attempts to tear from his hands a sign declaring: "No Convoys, No A. E. F." Percy M. Creasy, 18, private at Fort Myer, was charged with assault.

John Roosevelt Quits Job for Naval Service

Boston, May 12.—John Roosevelt has resigned from W. Filene's Sons Co. as of May 10, with the intention of entering active naval service within a few weeks, it was learned here tonight.

Roosevelt joined Filene's three years ago, shortly after his graduation from Harvard, and began his retailing experience as stock boy in the basement of the main store. At the time of his resignation he was acting manager of Filene's branch shop in Winchester, Mass.

Hess Meets Scot With Hayfork And Spends an Hour in Gossip

Soldiers Chaff Nazi Leader on Bad Luck In Bailing Out

By Ernest Agnew
Associated Press Staff Writer

Glasgow (Tuesday), May 13.—A Scottish ploughman told today how he armed himself with a pitchfork to challenge a Nazi parachuting to earth on his farm but that the 'chutist—Rudolf Hess—offered no resistance and was in good humor. He gossiped for an hour before the authorities took him away.

Totally unaware of the political stature of his air-borne visitor, David McLean found Hess lying in the field with his ankle broken, and assisted him to his cottage. Two British soldiers, who turned up on routine duty thinking they had caught an ordinary German airman, chaffed Hess about his bad luck in bailing out.

This was McLean's story:

"I was in the house and everyone else was in bed and I heard a plane roaring overhead. I ran out to the back of the farm. I heard a crash and saw the plane burst into flames about 200 yards away.

"I was amazed and a bit frightened when I saw the parachute coming slowly downward. I could see a man swinging from the harness. I concluded it was a German airman bailing out and ran back to my house for help. They were all asleep. I looked around for a weapon but found nothing except a hayfork.

"Fearing I might lose the airman,

I hurried 'round by myself again back of the house and in the field I saw a man lying down with his parachute nearby.

"He smiled and I helped him to his feet. He thanked me, but I could see he'd injured his foot some way. I helped him into the house. By this time my mother and sister were out of bed and made tea. He declined the tea and smiled when we told him we

R.A.F. Heavily Raids Bremen And Hamburg

Ports Declared Hard Hit; Nazis Concentrate On British Airfields

By the Associated Press

London, May 12.—British bombers, apparently still concentrating on efforts to paralyze Germany's sea power at its source, were reported officially today to have left Hamburg and Bremen, two of Germany's great shipbuilding centers, in chaos after devastating new overnight attacks.

The Royal Air Force continued "destruction and disorganization of vital parts" of Hamburg, the air ministry said, and delivered an equally heavy raid on Bremen with corresponding success in the brightness of a clear, moonlit night.

Antiaircraft defenses at home, meanwhile, both planes and guns, were shooting down nine more Nazi raiders during German night attacks which were widespread but nowhere as intensive or destructive as the Saturday night bombardment which shattered more of London's hallowed historic and religious shrines and engulfed whole blocks of the capital in flame.

Air bases, springboards of Britain's increasing air attacks, evidently were the object of raiders.

An authoritative source, however, declared German claims to have

High Officials Refuse Comment on Report Of Flight to England

By the Associated Press

Berlin (Tuesday), May 13.—Authorized quarters repeated an official German statement early today that Rudolf Hess, No. 3 Nazi leader, was missing on a forbidden airplane flight and, suggesting he was suffering from "hallucinations," insisted nothing was known of London's official report that he had landed in Scotland.

[The British broadcast, heard by several foreign correspondents, presumably was heard by few persons in Germany because of laws forbidding Germans to listen to foreign radio stations, a United Press dispatch said.

[Informed German quarters, when asked about the British report, said they had not yet been officially informed of it and emphasized that neither comment thereon nor any further details of the entire "Hess affair" could be expected before later in the day.]

Hess left Augsburg in Bavaria about 6 p. m. Saturday, piloting his own machine, and has not been heard from since, it was said in an official radio announcement by the National Socialist Party.

Hess left behind a letter showing "in its confusion traces of mental

Strength and Audacity Wane

Japan So Worn China Can Win With Material Aid, Chiang Says

By the Associated Press

Chungking, May 12.—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, in one of his rare speeches, made public today, declared that Japan is so nearly exhausted by almost four years of Chinese resistance that China, given only material and economic aid, can whip her single-handed.

Significantly, the generalissimo coupled this assertion with a declaration that the resolution of the American people "to defend the spirit of democracy" would "support the policy of their government to the point of war" and that "Japanese aggression has now neither the strength nor the audacity to risk a clash with America."

China needs neither the aid of an expeditionary force nor the action of a powerful navy from her friends, Chiang declared, to "put down this enemy of all who would dwell in peace on the shores of the Pacific."

The speech was made Saturday night at a farewell dinner given by Mme. Chiang Kai-shek in honor of United States Ambassador Nelson T. Johnson, who is going to Australia as Minister. It was released for publication today.

Citing an editorial of April 30 in the Japan Times and Advertiser, an organ controlled by the Japanese foreign office, in which demilitarization of the United States and British bases in the Pacific was proposed as a part of a "peace plan," Chiang said this showed the real extent of the dreams of Japanese militarists.

"Should the Japanese militarists manage in some way to dispose of their China problem they would certainly attack America," he said.

British Are Dumfounded; Deputy Fuehrer, Flying In Defiance of Hitler, Is Mentally Ill, Berlin Says

Copyright by New York Times

London (Tuesday), May 13.—Rudolf Hess, the Deputy Fuehrer and the next in command after Hitler and Goering, came down by parachute in Scotland Saturday night and is now a prisoner of war.

No. 10 Downing Street tonight issued what was probably the strangest and most dramatic document ever to have come from the official home of the British democracy.

It said that Rudolf Hess "has landed in Scotland." It also said that on the night of Saturday a Messerschmitt-110 was reported to have crossed the coast of Scotland flying in the direction of Glasgow.

The report at first was not believed, said the communique, since a Messerschmitt-110 would not have enough fuel to return to Germany. Later a Messerschmitt-110 crashed near Glasgow with its guns loaded, said the statement. (Some reports said the guns were unloaded.) Soon afterwards a German officer—the statement did not describe his uniform—was found with a parachute in the neighborhood. His ankle was broken.

The man was hospitalized in Glasgow, where he first gave his name as "Horn." He later said it was Hess.

"He brought with him various photographs of himself at different ages, apparently in order to establish his identity," the communique continued.

[Hess also carried medicines for heart and gall bladder ailments, the United Press reported.]

Farm Laborer Finds Him Groaning

Ivone A. Kirkpatrick, who used to be the British Minister in Berlin, was sent to Scotland in the quickest way possible. The ministry of information announced this Tuesday morning that the man had been definitely identified as Hess.

Earlier the Germans had announced that Hess, suffering from hallucinations, had violated Hitler's orders and had taken a plane.

Just before nightfall a farm laborer found him, groaning in agony, with a parachute wrapped around him. The Deputy Fuehrer was taken to a little "butt and ben"—the Scottish name for a two-roomed cottage.

Like any other German visitor to these islands, Hess was arrested by the police. Then he was turned over to the soldiers and is now in a military hospital near Glasgow.

The Germans have already announced that Hess' "adjutants" have been arrested. The British are inclined to believe there is another purge—a similar purge to the one following the arrest of Ernst Roehm, the Storm Troop commander, who also was one of Hitler's closest men.

From this distance it is almost impossible to say what this development means so far as Germany is concerned. A conscientious reporter can only record what the British think it means. One man told this reporter tonight:

"This is the first break we have had since the war started."

The minister of information, Alfred Duff-Cooper, himself acted as messenger boy to bring the announcement from No. 10 Downing Street

Meant to Land, Hess Quoted as Saying

London, May 13 (AP).—The Daily Express today quoted Rudolf Hess as saying after landing in Scotland:

"I had intended landing the plane but I could not find a suitable landing ground so I stalled the machine over the open country and jumped out."

to the ministry of information. It was read out there with full pomp and ceremony, but two seconds after it was read Duff-Cooper and his assistant, Sir Walter Monckton, were alone in the room as everybody made a wild scramble for a telephone.

The air ministry telephoned the admiralty to tell the First Lord Albert V. Alexander what had happened. Alexander was busy. His secretary told the man telephoning to cease "pulling my leg."

Prize Equals Three Panzer Divisions

The British were not inclined to believe German stories that Hess was crazy. They point out it is impossible to fly a Messerschmitt adequately if you are suffering from a "mental disorder." Furthermore the British say there is the fact that Hess had with him photographs which would establish his identity. That, it is claimed here, is clear proof he was in his right mind.

It is, of course, possible that Hess was in some sort of a row with other members of the Nazi party and got out while the getting out was good. It is also possible that Hess was a fanatical Nazi and found some sort of monkey business going on which he could not stomach.

In either case the British would appear to have caught a prize equal, at least, to three panzer divisions. If Hess is really sane and really fled Berlin, he is an intelligence officer's dream for the information he can give.

Since he apparently set a course straight for Britain it would not appear that he would be unwilling to help Britain. All the spies in all the world could not equal the information possessed by this man who was first discovered by a Scottish ploughman. Begging for water and being consoled by two British soldiers on his bad luck, was the man who may prove to be the turning point in this war.

There is one other consideration which the British are thinking about tonight. For months—indeed ever since the war started—the British, although lately they will not say so, have been basing considerable hope

R. A. F. Fields Blasted After Raids on Reich

By the Associated Press

Berlin, May 12.—Britain's air bases, from which increasing numbers of heavy bombers have been taking off to assault Germany's industrial centers, were pounded successfully overnight with Luftwaffe fire and explosive bombs, the German high command said today.

"On several airports bomb hits were scored between parked heavy bombers," the high command reported, while fires were started in hangars, shelters and fuel dumps.

The German news agency D.N.B., elaborating on the high command communique, reported that 25 British airports in all were raided in an attack by several hundred planes against Britain's mounting aerial offensive. Some of these bases, D. N. B. added, were "very heavily hit" in dive attacks, and 17 British planes were destroyed on the ground.

Announcement of the switch in German bomber tactics from British harbor facilities accompanied an unusual admission by the high command that "stronger" R. A. F. formations had attacked the important German ports of Hamburg and Bremen over the weekend, inflicting numerous casualties and heavy destruction.

Hamburg, the country's largest port, underwent its second pounding in as many nights, but it was reported that damage was confined largely to residential districts. Six deaths were reported there. Seven of the British attackers were declared to have been shot down. (The British air ministry acknowledged that four of its bombers were missing.)

From Friday through Sunday, the bulletin said, the British paid for their raids with the loss of 36 planes—19 of them victims of Nazi night chasers. The Germans acknowledged the loss of 18 planes in the same period.

Nazi bombers swooping on a convoy passing through St. George's Channel, west of England, were said to have destroyed three ships totaling 24,000 tons and to have damaged three others.

German fighting planes sank a heavily laden 8,000-ton British merchantman off the British east coast today, authorized sources said.

Authorized sources said that German troops had occupied Melos Island, in the Cyclades (Kykladon) group, 75 miles north of Crete, capturing 118 Englishmen and 200 Cretans. This was the twelfth Greek island reported occupied so far by Axis forces. Melos is famed as the island where the statue of Venus de Milo was found.

Von Papen Sees Hitler, Flies to Turkey

Ankara, May 12.—Franz von Papen, the German Ambassador to Ankara, came back to his post today by plane following a series of last-minute conferences with Reichfuerher Hitler at Obersalzburg.

Von Papen has been expected almost daily for two weeks, and the fact that he continually delayed his return and then at the last minute had a long conversation with Hitler is regarded as significant.

Events are shaping up rapidly in the Middle East and the only hand which now remains fully to be disclosed is that of Germany. Russia has abandoned her disinterest in this area by according full diplomatic recognition to the bellicose Rachid Ali government of Iraq. Britain, already engaged in extensive military operations in Iraq, has signified a disinclination to come to any terms with what she characterizes "the rebels."

Turkey, allied to both disputants, is seeking to use her good offices to acquire a solution, but none appears satisfactory.

What von Papen plans to accomplish in this situation is not yet known.

German circles here believe it is certain the ambassador will propose a far-reaching economic treaty to Turkey. This country is now virtually cut off from access to the British commercial world.

It is considered more than likely von Papen will see Nadji Chevket, the Iraqi defense minister, who has been here for the last several days, carrying on negotiations with the Turkish government. It is beginning to appear increasingly clear that hopes for mediation of the Iraqi-British dispute are becoming faint and it is certainly to Germany's interest to keep the flames of Arab trouble fanned.

It would appear that one of the objectives of Nadji Chevket's visit has been accomplished—completion of the negotiations leading up to Soviet recognition of the new Bagdad government.

It is learned that when Rachid Ali Beg Gailani was prime minister of Iraq in 1930 he initiated negotiations for Russian recognition, which terminated when he fell from office. These were revived after the recent coup d'etat returning him to office and final arrangements were made through the Iraqi Legation here.

The Russian move is regarded as deeply significant by diplomatic sources here, who recall that it is the second obviously pro-Axis step since the governmental change in Moscow. The first was Soviet withdrawal of recognition from three German-occupied countries.

It is believed by responsible diplomats that the Soviet is doing everything possible to improve relations with the Reich in order to reduce the possibility of a German attack on the Ukraine and Caucasus.

Hitherto the German view has been that Rachid Beg's war with Britain was premature and Berlin has maintained a largely stand-off attitude. However, it is thought Russia's decision may change this situation. A German embassy spokesman said this afternoon it was certain Berlin would send a minister to Bagdad.

Therefore the old fear of the Middle East that Germany may extend her war against Britain to this area while Russia quietly assumes control of a portion of the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf is once more recurrent.

It is believed the Middle Eastern situation has not yet quite crystallized and that events may soon be forthcoming now that Herr Von Papen is back.

Little People Have Big Tales to Tell

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, May 12.—A lot of big things are happening to a lot of little people in London these days and not getting into the papers.

For instance:

The broad-bosomed seller of primroses who was bombed out of her street corner stand several weeks ago set up business across the street. Now bombed out again, she's had to go to still another corner.

"It's this blinking moving about," she sighed, "that bothers a soul. That, and me old man who got a foot blowed off. Blimey, he can't move and here I'm jumping all over London."

Then there's Gina.

Her husband, a naval officer, drowned at sea after they had been married a few months. She was given a government job.

The other night, clad in dirty slacks and her dead husband's school blazer, she fought fires from midnight to dawn—fought them with her hands and feet until you wondered how she could keep on.

As dawn came over the city she stopped other fire-watchers and took them into her house, pouring tea and drinks. Wiping her grimy face, she lifted her glass to her officer-husband's picture.

"To you, darling," she said very softly.

And the fellow who wouldn't close his pub.

Defying all orders, he kept open to serve firemen and other workers.

"I can't help it if they close me up," he explained, "I've done a fine business."

Firemen disclosed that he had given half his stock away and sold the rest at reduced prices to those fighting fires and sifting through debris for victims.

There is a girl who was born in Germany, now an ambulance driver for Britain.

A demolition worker recited matter-of-factly:

"It's a queer business, ours is. We are digging for a little girl and run across an old chap of 80. Alive he was, too."

Little things, of course, but they mean a lot when they happen to you.

Hitler, Darlan Meet; Closer Ties Hinted

Berlin (Tuesday), May 13 (AP).—Adolph Hitler has received the French Vice Premier Admiral Darlan in the presence of German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, it was officially announced early today.

The communique announcing the meeting did not say where or when it took place.

The announcement said:

"The Fuehrer, in the presence of the Reichsminister of foreign affairs, received the Vice President of the French Ministerial Council Admiral Darlan."

Observers considered the announcement of the meeting a likely forerunner to an announcement of certain concessions by the French in favor of the Germans.

By the Associated Press

Vichy, May 12.—Separate meetings of Adolf Hitler with Joseph Stalin and Benito Mussolini were considered in diplomatic circles here tonight as likely to result from the current political moves over Europe.

The object of the meetings, these circles said, probably would be complete economic if not military organization of the Axis-dominated continent.

Observers listed the current shakeup of Spain's civil and military organization and Vice Premier Admiral Jean Darlan's negotiations with the Germans as indicators of forthcoming conferences of the German Fuehrer and Stalin and Mussolini.

Dakar Trip Noted

In addition, they noted the trip of French Air Secretary Jean Marie Bergeret to Dakar yesterday for the announced purpose of strengthening air defenses and seeking closer aerial ties between French West Africa and the mother country.

Petain returned from his Riviera vacation today to await the arrival of Darlan tomorrow from collaboration conferences with German leaders.

Petain to See Leahy

Also high on Petain's list of appointments was one with United States Ambassador Admiral William D. Leahy, who has asked an interview to discuss the general European situation, including that of food supplies.

In Paris press attacks, Leahy has been termed a "blackmailer" who is attempting to use the critical food situation as a means of preventing German-French collaboration.

An echo of the warning from Fernand De Brinon, Vichy Ambassador to Paris, that France would defend Dakar should the United States attempt to seize it has appeared in the Paris Matin.

Over a picture of the West African port, this defiant caption appeared:

"Come and take it!"

De Brinon's statement that if the United States entered the war the common task of Europe would be to organize a continental defense against America and Britain, led to speculation that such a defense organization was the subject of the negotiations between Darlan and German officials.

British Report Success in Iraq And North Africa

Cairo, May 12 (U.P.).—British headquarters announced tonight that Imperial land and air forces had the enemy on the run all over Iraq, had decimated an Italian unit at Tobruk and had made destructive bombing attacks on Axis bases in North Africa.

The beleaguered British garrison at Tobruk was said to have taken the offensive while both Imperial and Axis forces were digging in for an indefinite run of the month-old siege at the strategic port.

The Royal Air Force said the situation in Iraq had become "more stabilized" with British planes engaged in punitive operations against the rebellious forces of Premier Rashid Ali Beg Gailani wherever the stragglers could be found.

British mechanized patrols at Tobruk surprised a detachment of about 300 Italians, general headquarters claimed, and fell on it to strike a decisive blow inflicting heavy casualties and netting the British a number of prisoners.

Hamburg, Bremen Hammered

bombed 25 airdromes were "as usual grossly exaggerated."

London had a two-hour air raid alert last night but there was only a brief burst of gunfire and no planes were heard overhead.

Much-bombed Hamburg and Bremen were R. A. F. targets for the third night in the last four and an air ministry said shipbuilding yards which line the River Elbe on both sides for 9 miles at Hamburg "were threaded and crossed with fire."

It mentioned specifically the Blohm and Voss yards, where some of Germany's mightiest battleships have been built.

In these operations, which included attacks also on the German port of Emden and the Dutch plane and shipping centers of Rotterdam, Ijmiden and Texel, the British acknowledged losing four planes.

Pilot Stalks Raider

Still piling up their record-breaking bag of Nazi night raiders—already far ahead of the 90 mark for a while month set in April—Britain's defenders raised this month's figure to 133 so far. Of these, night fighters are credited with shooting down at least 107.

One of these was said to have been the victim of a Polish pilot who stalked a German raider "almost to within touching distance" before shooting it down into the sea.

In addition, the air ministry claimed five German raiders destroyed during daylight Sunday—four by fighter planes and one by antiaircraft guns.

There was only slight air activity during daylight today, the government said, with little damage and no casualties in the one early morning attack on a point on the southeast coast.

British officials ruefully surveyed what was left of such monumental British structures as the houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey and the British museum after the fiery Saturday night hail of explosives.

They found walls teetering, great gaping holes in roofs and courtyards filled with crumbled bricks and masonry.

British Fleet Shells Bengasi

By the United Press

London, May 12.—The admiralty announced tonight that the British Mediterranean fleet bombarded Bengasi from point-blank range Saturday night.

The announcement said the bombardment was carried out by powerful units of light forces which damaged shipping.

It was said repeated dive-bombing attacks and fire from shore batteries was ineffective, and the British ships suffered no damage or casualties.

Italians Claim Success

Rome, May 12 (AP).—Blazing guns of Italian shore batteries and German Stukas combined to rout British warships shelling Bengasi Saturday night, the Italians announced today, in the second naval assault within three days on that Axis North African base.

The Fascist high command said bomb hits were scored on the three attacking British ships.

Morgenthau Puts Economies Up to Congress

By Cecil B. Dickson
International News Service Staff Writer

Secretary Morgenthau last night tossed back to Congress the job of cutting nondefense spending after Representative Wesley Disney (Democrat), of Oklahoma, warned his House Ways and Means Committee colleagues he would lead a revolt against the Treasury's $3,500,000,000 tax program unless the Administration slashes nonessentials a billion dollars.

Refusing a request of Representative Thomas A. Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, to submit specific recommendations for a billon dollar cut in nondefense spending, Morgenthau chided Congress for not effecting savings.

"Congress is constantly complaining about being a rubber stamp," Morgenthau told his press conference. "They are elected officials. What does anyone at this end have to do it?"

Morgenthau said the Treasury was studying a letter from Jenkins asking that he name places where cuts can be made to carry out the Secretary's proposal to the Ways and Means Committee that a billon dollars could be saved.

Explaining it was difficult for him to make suggestions since President Roosevelt had transferred the Budget Bureau to the White House, Morgenthau said Jenkins should have sent a duplicate of his letter to the bureau.

"I'm not going to vote to place an additional $3,500,000,000 tax burden on the people unless the Administration is willing to make a proportionate cut in Federal expenditures for nonessentials," Disney declared at today's hearings.

Colleagues Startled

Startling his colleagues, the Oklahoman, long the bearer of the sobriquet "No Deficit Disney," decleared he had found that it was in the purview of the Ways and Means Committee to write into a tax bill "mandatory cuts in appropriations." He said "it was done before the Civil War."

"At the proper time," Disney later said, "I will submit a list of cuts that can be made on nondefense expenditures that will save a billion dollars. I plan to fight for this to the bitter end. With all this defense spending, certainly all of the pet appropriations for nonessentials can be made to sacrifice as well as the taxpayers."

Chairman Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, said the committee would look into Disney's proposal, and declared:

"I'm for economy any way we can effect it, without interfering with the defense program."

Public to Be Heard

Doughton announced that "the public is going to be given a chance to be heard" on the Treasury's excess profits tax proposals, which are now scheduled to be presented by Assistant Secretary John L. Sullivan either Wednesday or Thursday.

The committee yesterday heard three witnesses urge that excess profits taxes be levied to allow continued normal growth of small and medium sized corporations. They expressed willingness to pay 100 per cent excess profits levies, as long as they were allowed normal growth income.

These witnesses were Harry C. Carr, of Philadelphia, vice president of Bayuk Cigars; R. C. Kennedy, of New York, vice president of Cluett Peabody & Co., and William M. Carney, of Chester, Pa., of the Scott Paper Co.

Donald Rein, of Washington, vice president of United Typothetae of America, opposed the Treasury's proposal for a 2-cent bank check tax, declaring it would work a hardship on small bank depositors. Harry M. Righter, of Sullivan, Ill., of the Easy Cigarette Maker Co., urged that uniform taxes be levied on cigarette papers.

Frank Schwartz, of Pittsburgh, Pa., representing the Pittsburgh Furriers Association, declared taxes on furs should be applied at the source instead of on retailers.

Edgar G. Brown, of Washington, president of United Government Employes, a Negro, called for a reduction in WPA funds to release Negroes for defense industry work.

Joint Approval Given to 85% Farm Parity

By the Associated Press

Legislation to require mandatory, price-pegging loans on major farm crops at 85 per cent of parity, and to impose heavy penalties for marketing "abnormal production" was approved yesterday by a Senate-House committee.

The group, appointed to reconcile divergent House and Senate views, estimated the program would assure farmers cooperating with this year's crop control measures a return of $1.15 a bushel for wheat, 87 cents a bushel for corn and 16 cents a pound for cotton. (These figures are averages and include Government benefit payments.)

The proposed loan rates would be: Cotton, 13.49 cents; corn, 69.87 cents; wheat, 96.22 cents, flue-cured tobacco, 19 cents; fire and dark cured tobacco, 8.41 cents, and burley, 15.53 cents.

Senator Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, said that present loans on cotton were about 9 cents, or 58 per cent of parity; on corn were 60 cents, more than 70 per cent, and on wheat, 60 cents, or about 56 per cent.

(Parity prices are designed to give farmers the same purchasing power, in terms of other commodities, they had from 1909 to 1914.)

The new legislation was a compromise between original Senate and House bills. The Senate had proposed 85 per cent parity loans and acreage reductions, and sought an indefinite time limit on the program. The House had approved 70 per cent loans, stiff increases in penalties and proposed to limit the life of the bill to 1941 crops. The compromise retained the Senate loan figure and the House penalty provisions and time limit.

The Agriculture Department had indicated favor for loans at 75 per cent of parity. Officials there said that boosting the rate to 85 per cent probably would result in a 10 to 20 per cent increase in retail prices of pork and dairy products because of higher feed costs.

The new penalty rates for marketing above-quota supplies of wheat and corn would be 50 per cent of the basic loan rates. Present penalties are 15 cents a bushel.

Both Senate and House leaders made arrangements to have the two chambers complete action on the measure in two or three days.

Keynes Outlines Program For Avoiding War Inflation

To meet the great civilian defense problem of reaching maximum output with minimum economic dislocation, John Maynard Keynes, British treasury advisor, yesterday recommended a three-point program to prevent inflation by raising taxes, permitting "a less-than-inflationary" price increase, and "a gigantic savings campaign."

Keynes, in this country on a mission of collaboration between "the American Treasury and Whitehall Street," declared that Great Britain hoped to prevent inflation by these devices and that presumably the United States was following the same pattern.

In England, the famed economist disclosed, prices have risen about 30 per cent above the prewar level, but recently the chancellor of the exchequer has "given his word" he will prevent further rises. The present increase, however, Keynes implied, has served to absorb some of the enlarged purchasing power which grew out of the war effort.

Payments Deferred

Added to this and the tax program, Keynes explained, is an intensively publicized effort to obtain savings, the latest development being the "deferred payment" plan under which the employer deducts part of the workers' wages, which sums are set up in accounts for the workers' credit and use after the war.

Keynes said he believed Americans "were just beginning to think about" the third method of reducing the greatly enlarged consumer purchasing power which was arising from the defense program.

Careful to avoid the appearance of making recommendations on the proper course of action for this country, or to ask additional aid for Britain, Keynes nevertheless indicated that the $7,000,000,000 lease-lend appropriation was only the first of a series of larger grants which the British expected.

Asked how much more he believed the United States would add to the amount, Keynes countered:

"I don't know, but I assume it is the initial fund, don't you? It doesn't sound like a complete program, do you think?"

Stronger Than Axis

Tall, debonair and at ease with his answers, Keynes' comments were made in a hotel-room press conference. He told reporters he believed that England, the British Empire and the United States were "incomparably stronger" in economic resources than the Axis powers, Germany, he explained, was at the peak of her productive effort, England was near the peak, and the United States was "very far from its full potential."

He agreed that his statement was based on the assumption that Germany would not be able to organize the productive ability of the countries which have been overrun.

Because for everything Germany is able to obtain from these nations an offsetting contribution is necessary, the balance will show no net gain to the Nazis, Keynes argued. Italy, he declared, has been "a serious strain" on her senior partner, which has had to give more than she got.

50 Intercoastal Vessels Ordered To Shipping Pool

Copyright by New York Times

New York, May 12.—The Maritime Commission has called upon intercoastal steamship operators to contribute 50 per cent, or about 50, of their big cargo vessels, aggregating 310,000 gross tons, to the 2,000,000-ton shipping pool which President Roosevelt ordered the commission establish as a further aid to the democracies, it became known tonight.

The ships, which are expected to be delivered within the next five weeks, reportedly will be operated from the United States to ports on the Red Sea via the Cape of Good Hope. The commission will pay the owners a fixed charter rate for cargo space on outward voyages only. The vessels will be on their own on homeward voyages, and the owners probably will use them to carry defense materials and other commerce to the United States at prevailing freight rates.

Transocean Heads Are Denied Bail

Nw York, May 12 (INS).—Manfred Zapp, head of the Nazi Trans-Oceau News Service, and his chief assistant, Guenther Tonn, arrested five days ago, were denied liberty on bail tonight by Federal Judge Samuel Mandelbaum.

Zapp and Tonn were arrested on a charge of failing to register under the Alien Act. They must remain in custody until called for trial in Washington or until deportation charges filed against them come to a head.

Defense to Get All Aluminum, Senators Told

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Direct military needs next year will take all available sources of aluminum, leaving none for electric refrigerators, pots and pans, or other civilian needs, William L. Batt, deputy OPM production chief, disclosed yesterday.

At the same time, defense officials said there was "a distinct possibility" that a 40 per cent instead of a 20 per cent cut in 1942 model automobile production may be necessary.

Testifying before the Senate Defense Investigating Committee, Batt admitted that estimates made last year by the defense commission as to aluminum requirements had proved entirely inadequate. He declared that the production goal fixed in this field and other defense production is not high enough to meet requirements.

"Our sights all the way down the line are too low," the former precision bearings manufacturer stated.

"In Speculative Stage"

The possibility of another cut in 1942 automobile production being required by defense needs was said to be entirely "in the speculative stage." It would reduce automobile output to about 3,100,000 cars, compared with this year's production of 5,289,972 cars.

Automobile manufacturers have already agreed to a request from the OPM to cut the output to 4,224,252 units for the 1942 production year beginning in August. Members of the OMP production division said that further increases in defense needs might require the further reduction, as well as curtailed manufacture of refrigerators, furnaces and electric household appliances.

Meanwhile, legislation designed to stop the flow of essential defense materials from the Philippines to Axis powers was approved by the House Military Affairs Committee.

The bill extends the provisions of the export licensing system to the Philippines, the Canal Zone and the District of Columbia, and is intended to prevent other nations from acquiring such supplies as copper, iron, manganese, chromium, coconut oil and copra from the Philippine Islands.

Batt told the Senate Committee that should the new B-19 "superbomber" become the "tactical weapon of the future," 1942 aluminum requirements might be 1,400,000,000 pounds instead of 1,200,000,000 pounds as now expected. Such demands can be met, he said, but it will require "all the power of Donneville Dam plus all the power that Grand Coulee will be producing at that time."

Production facilities for aluminum will be increased this month when the Reynolds Metal Co. starts operations, the OPM official said. Heretofore, the Aluminum Corporation of America has been the only American producer.

Police, who said he "jumped or fell," found stamped, sealed letters addressed to Daniel C. Sayre, R. F. D., Rockville, Md.; and to Miss Jane Johansen, Williamsport, Pa.

SEC Rules AgainstMorgan On Securities

By the Associated Press

The Securities Commission ruled yesterday that Morgan, Stanley & Co. cannot have preference over ohter bankers in handling the forthcoming $120,000,000 financing of the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation.

The Morgan-Stanley firm had asked the commission to give it exception from a new SEC rule which requires that the bankers for utility securities issues should be determined by competitive bidding. It asked preference on the ground that since the issue would be so large and because the firm was so familiar with Columbia Gas & Electric's financing problems, competitive bidding was not feasible.

The commission, however, said in an opinion that "Columbia made no efforts whatever to obtain competitive bids. . . . Several other underwriters (besides Morgan) have indicated their willingness and ability to head the underwriting of the proposed issue. . . . Under these circumstances, the failure of Columbia to investigate the proposition of these other underwriters has shut off the very type of evidence that would enable us to determine whether or not efforts to obtain competitive bids were practicable."

Can't Keep Our Way of Life If British Lose, Halifax Says

By the Associated Press

Kansas City, May 12.—If the democracies "are to defeat Hitler and those who serve him with an almost religious fervor, our faith must burn with a flame as white as theirs," Lord Halifax said tonight.

"Thus and thus only," the British Ambassador to the United States declared in an address prepared for a public meeting, "may this dark menace to our people's lives and human freedom perish in the unquenchable fire of our resolve."

Lord Halifax expressed confidence in England's ability to win, "if you are willing to give us all the help you can, first in the field of production in the United States, and second, as you judge best, in assisting to strengthen that lifeline by which supplies pass from the factories and workshops of the United States to the place of their employment."

"My task is not to try to tell you what you ought or ought not to think or do," he said, "but only to set before you in all frankness the picture as my own British people see it. . . .

"I do not believe it is any more possible to suppose that you could maintain your way of life if Nazi rule were established over the British Commonwealth of Nations, and British sea power were destroyed, than it is to suppose that we in Britain could survive if Hitler reigned supreme over all the rest of Europe.

"There comes a time in the lives of men and nations when they stand face to face with the ultimate realities. If and when we truly feel sacred things to be at stake, conscience alone can decide how a man must reply to the question of where his duty lies."

The tall Ambassador and Lady Halifax, on a tour of the Midwest, arrived from Chicago this morning. Lord Halifax has a three-day program of engagements. Lady Halifax will return to Washington tomorrow night.

Aides said the Ambassador and R. G. Menzies, prime minister of Australia, would hold an important conference in Chicago Thursday. The Australian is en route home from a conference with Prime Minister Churchill in London.

Trade Talks Reopened

Hull to Welcome Argentina's Foreign Minister Here Today

As high Government officials prepared to welcome to Washington today Enrique Ruiz-Guinazu, Argentine foreign minister, the State Department announced last night fresh negotiations for reciprocal trade agreements with Argentina and Uruguay.

Both events pointed anew to the importance attached officially to this country's relations with Argentina and the enthusiasm with which the continental solidarity policy is being pressed.

Secretary of State Hull will head an official reception committee to greet the foreign minister, who is expected to have extensive conferences with United States officials before continuing his journey home from Europe.

This country conducted trade agreement negotiations simultaneously with Argentina and Uruguay two years ago, but after prolonged discussions the negotiations collapsed. Since that time, new preliminary conferences have been held, leading up to last night's formal announcement.

Public hearings on the proposed agreements will start on June 23, at which all interested parties will have an opportunity to be heard.

Since Argentina and Uruguay are Latin-America's chief meat producing countries difficulties arose in previous negotiations over objections by American livestock raisers to any relaxation on bars against importation of South American meat.

The United States now has reciprocal trade agreements with 11 of the other 20 American republics.

Official efforts to increase inter-American trade as a means of countering Axis powers' dealings with the Latin countries have met with some successes because of the physical difficulties of trade between South America and war-bound Europe. Greater stimulation of the increasing trade, through reciprocal agreements, is a goal.

Heading the list of Argentine products on which the United States may grant import concessions were cheese, preserved, pickled or salted fish, grapes, plums, pears, flaxseed, corned beef hash, broom corn, champagne and wines, wools, hides, cattle skins, and footwear.

The list for Uruguay included flaxseed, wools, hides, tallow and glycerin.

House Kills Overton Fiscal Plan by Vote of 230 to 69

not surrendered the battle for his formula which, if applied to 1942 estimates, would produce a Federal payment of about $9,300,000 as compared with the 1941 contribution of $6,000,000.

"Spirit of Filibuster"

The House debated the formula—a proposal to base the annual Federal payment on the ratio of land owned by the United States to the entire area of the District—in what Chairman Jennings Randolph of the district Committee, called a "spirit of filibuster."

Representative Tarver (Democrat), of Georgia, objected to Randolph's request for unanimous consent to limit debate to an hour and a half. Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, interrupted a plea for the bill from Representative Sauthoff (Progressive), of Wisconsin, to demand a quorum call, a move that delayed proceedings three-quarters of an hour.

And Representative Whittington (Democrat), of Mississippi, repeatedly rapped for order, calling upon members to clear the aisles and confine conversations to the cloakrooms, before Randolph arose and pleaded for "orderly" procedure and "fair play and mutual regard."

"The District of Columbia Committee," Randolph said, "is entitled to a little better treatment."

Dirksen lead the opposition with a declaration that, under the formula, Congress would lose control of the Federal payment, which, he said, would grow larger from year to year as the Government acquires more land. Subsequent opposition speakers reiterated his assertion that adoption of the formula would be followed by clamor for Federal funds from States with vast national parks and other Federal properties.

Washington residents "know less about the District than the people of Berlin, Germany," declared Representative Poage (Democrat), of Texas. He charged that the Washington newspapers never tell a "straight story," adding that "if the people knew the facts they would never be so unfair as to ask for a bill like this."

Turning to the press gallery, Poage issued a "challenge" to Washington papers to publish figures of Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, showing "taxes on adjusted valuation" in Washington and other large cities. Washington pays $15.75 per 1,000 in taxes, Bates stated, while New York pays $27.36; Chicago, $37.71; Philadelphia, $28.75; Detroit, $33.23; Cleveland, $25.56; Baltimore, $30.34, and Boston, $40.

Poage also dared newspapers to 'publish the fact that the gasoline tax in Washington is about one-half of what it is elsewhere."

Capitalites Declared Spoiled

Describing Washingtonians as "spoiled," Representative Ford (Republican), of California, called apartment owners here "profiteers" and declared that if rents are not kept down "drastic legislation" will result.

Representative Thomason (Democrat), of Texas, called upon the House to "quit making a football out of the District and do something fair and just." Sauthoff and Representative Sasscer Democrat), whose district includes nearby Prince Georges County in Maryland, assailed the House for lack of interest in the District. Both called attention to the fact that out of a membership of 435, no more than 60 members listened to debate at any one time.

"If laws for the District are bad laws, that's your fault and my fault," Sauthoff declared after several members had attacked District taxes as too low. "We cannot sidestep our responsibility in this respect. Try to do the square thing for this mass of people who have no voice of their own."

House Roll Call On Overton Plan

heard Sherwood B. Smith, principal engineer, Office of Chief of Engineers, U. S. A., assert that gas bombs may be employed in the European war "should the situation demand more horrible effects."

In a discussion of air-raid shelters, he revealed that adequate splinter-proof bomb shelters can presently be bought for $75 per person, and bomb-resistant shelters for about $150.

After other technical papers were heard in the morning session, the engineers inspected facilities at the new Washington Airport.

Today, members of the society will assemble at Fort Belvoir, Va., to witness a series of demonstrations, including the building of a new-type light pontoon and trestle bridge and in "blitz" warfare. A motorized war-strength company of Fifth Engineers will dismount from its trucks, unload equipment, and within 30 minutes construct a 200-foot bridge strong enough to carry ammunition trucks, antitank guns, heavy machine guns and field kitchens—the materiel brought forward behind attacking infantry.

Inducted as officers of the society for 1941 were the following: Rear Admiral Ben Moreell, chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, president; Rear Admiral L. O. Colbert, Washington, first vice president; Col. William Kelly, Buffalo, second vice president. Directors are Frederick H. Fowler, Palo Alto, Calif.; E. S. Bres, New Orleans; Gano Dunn, New York; Maj. A. C. Harper, New York; Col. C. O. Sherrill, Cincinnati; Lieut. Col. T. B. Parker, Knoxville, Tenn.

U. S. Reenters Deadlocked Smoot Parley

Conciliation Service efforts in the Smoot Sand and Gravel Corporation strike were deadlocked at an early hour last night.

The Labor Department service reentered the negotiations, after the National Defense Mediation Board announced its crowded docket would not allow it to consider the problem for several days.

Meanwhile, members of the 300 striking Sand and Gravel Workers Local 22075, A. F. L., continued 24-hour picketing of the three closed plants of the company in Washington and Alexandria. The strike began at 7 a. m. yesterday.

Federal Works Administration officials denied much Federal defense work was imperiled by the strike. Only construction on the War Department Building at Twenty-third Street and Virginia Avenue Northwest will be affected and that "not for several days," it was said. Federal officials at other sources suggested that building materials might be brought in from Baltimore.

Conciliator Frank Sheehan is hearing the strike case, in which A. T. Courtney, president of the union; F. Clark Ellis, A. F. L. organizer, and A. M. Parker, Thomas A. Butt and Roger Whiteford, secretary, treasurer and attorney, respectively, of the company, are representatives.

charging, fueling and use of dry-dock facilities.

The foreign shipping requisition bill effects 84 vessels now idle in American ports, of German, Italian, French, Danish, Lithuanian, Estonian and Rumanian registry. The German, Italian and Danish vessels, 69 in all, are already under "protective custody." Among the French vessels, not yet taken over, is the giant luxury liner Normandie.

Under an amendment adopted 8 to 7 by the Commerce Committee, no vessel belonging to any foreign government can be acquired except by purchase. Chairman Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, said the foreign ships now in American ports are all privately owned and not affected by the amendment. To prevent quick transfers of such ships from private to foreign government ownership, the committee approved a provision stating that no transfers made to evade the purposes of the bill would be recognized.

Bailey emphasized that the bill provides a variety of methods for taking over the foreign vessels and said he wanted to correct "the impression that we were just going to jump in and grab the ships."

The bill, he pointed out, provides for purchase requisition or charter of the vessels, as well as "the more drastic step of taking title to them, presumably under condemnation proceedings."

Senators Johnson (Republican), of California, and Burton (Republican), of Ohio, joined Clark and Vandenberg in voting against the bill.

Bailey said he expected prompt Senate action on the bill, but Senate leaders acknowledged that debate on an anticonvoy amendment might delay approval for days.

Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, was reported yesterday as determined to offer his anticonvoy resolution as a "rider" to the shipping bill.

Several isolationist Senators are advising against such a move, however, on the grounds that defeat of the amendment might be interpreted as Congressional approval of convoys.

The House yesterday heard its daily exchange on convoys, precipitated by a demand from Representative Tinkham (Republican), of Massachusetts, that President Roosevelt should either ask Congress to declare war or repudiate what he called "covert declarations of war" in recent speeches by Cabinet members.

Mediation Board Strives to Stem New Outbreak of Defense Strikes

prepared to resume conferences this afternoon. Unless some settlement is reached on the dispute, the principal issues of which are wages and the union shop, the United Auto Workers threatens to strike at 61 G. M. plants on Thursday.

4. Other Mediation Board panels met with disputants to prevent a threatened strike at the Bendix Aviation Co., where 8,100 C. I. O.-U. A. W. members are making airplane parts, and to settle strikes at the Utica-Mohawk Cotton Mills Co. and the Ex-Cell-O Corporation of Detroit, makers of machine tools and aircraft equipment.

Outside of Washington, the Associated Press reported:

5. At least 16 men were injured in Detroit when fighting broke out in a building trade teamsters' strike after lumber companies sought to move trucks manned by nonunion men. A. F. L. teamsters struck a week ago for higher wages and union recognition. Nine other groups were threatening a sympathy strike.

6. Also in Detroit, the Chrysler Corporation announced that 12,000 of its Dodge division workers were being laid off because of a shortage of materials, the source of which was cut off by a C. I. O.-U. A. W. strike at the New Haven Foundry Co.

7. Another Detroit strike loomed for 11 a. m. today as C. I. O.-U. A. W. officials conferred with management of the Hudson Motor Car Co. over a union demand for a 15-cent-an-hour wage increase. The president of the local union which has issued the strike call claimed that only a few of the company's 8,000 workers were employed on defense orders and that they would not be affected by the strike.

8. Defense production at the Cleveland, Ohio, Welding Co. was interrupted as a wage dispute shut down the plant and made about 1,100 workers idle. A walkout of A. F. of L. machinists, metal polishers and painters followed a breakdown in negotiations for a 10 per cent general wage increase for machinists.

9 From Buffalo, N. Y., C. I. O. President Philip Murray declared that the effect of strikes on national defense has been "infinitely small" and that "American labor will fight to protect and preserve democracy." In an interview he declined to elaborate on the statement except to say that he doubted whether the Ford and soft coal strikes had impeded "any substantial war production."

The San Francisco shipbuilding strike, which officials privately admitted was hourly growing more complicated, has had the effect of keeping idle between 15,000 and 20,000 workers who declined to cross the machinists' picket lines. The strikers are demanding higher wages and additional premiums for overtime work.

In a master West Coast shipbuilding labor standardization plan, negotiated this spring between unions and builders, with several Federal agencies participating, these issues were supposedly settled. All of the unions involved, with the single exception of the machinists, ratified the agreement. The machinists claim that the majority decision of the trades council is not binding on them, and despite the statement Sunday of A. F. of L. President Green that the stoppage was "an outlaw strike," other unionists refused to cross the picket lines.

Labor officials here also indicated that behind the scenes was the influence of Harry Bridges, left wing Pacific Coast Maritime labor leader, and other leftish labor groups.

Defense executive warned that unless a speedy settlement were reached, "drastic action" would be taken, not only because of the huge intrinsic value of the program now strike-bound, but also because of the broader implications regarding the whole defense objective of establishing zone agreements setting wages and working conditions and guaranteeing no production stoppages.

The Navy Department said that in San Francisco Bay there were 27 destroyers, 4 cruisers and 43 auxiliary vessels under construction.

The conference on the Boston strike will be held here today with union officials meeting Rear Admiral Moreel, Navy chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks. Union officials said the strike had not interfered with shipbuilding operations, but only with a $3,000,000 portion of a $30,000,000 construction project. They warned, however, that if no settlement were reached, they would pull out additional skilled unionists working directly on shipbuilding.

Women Help Protect U. S. From Gas War

(Ninth of a series of articles about women and their unique roles in national defense industries.)

By Inez Robb

International News Service Staff Writer

So far, gas is the one horror of modern war which embattled peoples have been spared. But it is a constant threat. Even in the United States, where its use seems preposterous, a Government dedicated to total defense dares take chances.

In the production of gas masks, as in parachutes and barrage balloons, hands accustomed to fine sewing are essential. In Fall River, Mass., more than 500 women needleworkers are engaged in the production of gas masks at the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. plant.

The gas mask division of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. at Akron is manned almost entirely by women. They not only do the vital sewing, but the cutting and assembling of various sections of the masks. In the Goodyear plant, women also have been intrusted with an operation requiring the utmost skill: the screwing of the outlet guard to the angle tubes of the mask. They are equally competent at trimming face blanks and flutter valves.

The manufacture of a gas mask, which is a delicate instrument, is a painstaking process calling for the utmost precision. As the assembly line moves along, carefully patterned pieces of rubber, canvas, glass and metal are transformed into masks which must be able to thwart the most deadly gases. Even the windows in the mask are of shatterproof safeglass and transparent plastic.

Many of the women who work in the gas mask division at Goodyear have sons who have been inducted into the Selective Service Army in recent months. Mrs. Pearl Crupmton, whose son, Van, is stationed at Fort Bragg, N. C., is only one of this group.

In this same plant, many women are employed in the manufacture of flotation bags to be installed in military planes. They are designed for the protection of planes in case of emergency landings on water. Such bags, in deflated condition, are inserted in the wings and fusilages of planes. They can be instantly inflated in case of emergency.

Just as feminine hands have been found invaluable in the taping and seaming of rubber surfaces for bullet-sealing gas tanks, barrage balloons and flotation bags, so they are equally indispensable in the manufacture of emergency life rafts designed for military aircraft which must fly over water. Goodyear is turning out large quantities of such boats for the air forces of the United States.

Yet in all the panorama of women in defense industries, the International News Service survey has come acros only one sad contretemps—and that in heavy industry. Even it, viewed in the right light, is a tribute to the deadly efficiency with which woman masters the tools of industry—given a chance.

In collecting the material for this series, I heard that a construction company not far from New York had in its employ a woman operating a huge 10-ton crane in defense production. Such a rare woman in such an unusual job deserved investigation.

On approaching the company employing this phenomenon, I discovered that there had indeed been such a woman, but she was no longer an employe of the firm. She had been a bit too efficient, company officials explained, waxing grim about the gills and very red in the face.

After considerable cajolery, one reluctant official told all. The woman, he admitted, had been a whiz, a crane operator of the first order. She was good, and she knew it. So good that she insisted on demonstrating her mastery of the crane by dropping the huge hook among groups of innocent workmen and defty snatching the pants from an unsuspecting victim.

"It was the neatest trick of the week," the official said, with reluctant admiration, "you can't have that sort of thing going on in a respectable plant like this. I was always scared to death she'd snag a Government inspector!"

"Fantasia", at National Ventures Into New Field

Disney, Stokowski and Taylor Collaborate On a New Screen Form That Reaches the Heights of Visual and Audible Artistry

By Nelson B. Bell

"Fantasia," the widely heralded collaboration of Walt Disney, Leopold Stokowski and Deems Taylor, given its Washington premiere in the National Theater last night under the auspices of the Young America Wants to Help division of the British War Relief, is all that it was proclaimed before its initial showing in the Capital.

In its variety, movement and treatment, it is the most amazing amalgamation of sight and sound that has even been contrived to startle the eyes and ears of man. Likewise, it is as pregnant with controversial aspects as conflicting advance reports of its merits and demerits gave any informed theatergoer a right to expect. In 'Fantasia" there is reflected little of the average playgoer's interpretation of standard music he has been accustomed to accept for the span of his life without minute analysis or any plumbing of the imaginative purposes of the composers or the mental figures that influenced their writings. I do not at all agree with Miss Dorothy Thompson that "Fantasia" is a desecration of the arts or a prostitution of the genius of the distinguished gentlemen who contrived it. Many will contend that in his animation Disney has outraged their every preconception of musical masterpieces they love. This is a view to which I cannot subscribe.

Not only is "Fantasia" fanciful. It is fantastic and, at times, takes on all of the colorful qualities of a phantasmagoria of sound and action. But it is never disrespectful to its subject, too extravagant in its imaginative flights or offensive to good taste.

In a parallel column, my learned colleague, Mr. Ray C. B. Brown, is discussing the musical aspects of this extraordinary experience in the theater. It is impossible to say whether music is the basis of "Fantasia" and Walt Disney's screen interpretation of the eight classic numbers to which the entertainment is dedicated merely decoration or whether the visual aspects of the work only provide an excuse for the utilization of a great wealth of the world's best music in a new form of musico-visual diversion. However that may be, "Fantasia" has been devised with enormous skill.

Pursues Dramatic Crescendo

The arrangement of Bach's Toccatta and Fugue in D Minor," Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite," Dukas' 'The Sorcerer's Apprentice," Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours," Moussorsky's "Night on Bald Mountain" and Schubert's "Ave Maria" is such as to compound that constantly mounting and cumulative effect that marks the progress of any "drama" of the first rank.

"Fantasia," of course, is not drama in any sense of sustained narrative or connected action. It is a mosaic of inspired conceptions of a diversified group of great musical compositions that tells no definite story. It does, nevertheless, adhere to a definite formula that marks a crescendo of both visual and auricular appeal. That is what I mean when I say it is superlative "drama."

The Tocatta and Fugue, with which the picture—if that is what it is—opens, is visualized with not too exciting formality. It serves principally to illuminate the degree to which Bach can be expressed to the eye in terms of light and movement. The "Nutcracker Suite" develops an increasing dramatic momentum and the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" introduces Disney's star of stars, Mickey Mouse, as the mischievous little rascal of the title. "Rite of Spring," which closes the first half of the bill, further emphasizes the interpretative genius of those who had the whole fascinating matter in charge.

Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," instead of being defiled, is accorded that immensely perceptive Disney treatment that permits the introduction of many of his engaging animal characters. The youngest of the Pegasus family of flying horses, for example, affords the most delightfully ingenuous amusement of the evening.

Disney's Satire at Its Best

This is a manifestation of one of Disney's prime gifts that is further carried out and accentuated in "Dance of the Hours." Here we have the most astounding ballet groups ever conjured in or out of the theater. They are composed of ostriches, hippopotami, elephants and crocodiles. Satirical humor runs high here, but it does not run contrary to what, by some miracle, might have been in the mind of Ponchielli when he was putting his musical notes on paper. The same is true of the melodramatic touches that have been given "Night on Bald Mountain." Schubert's "Ave Maria" brings the symposium of stunning innnovations to a close on a note of exquisite beauty.

I do not at all contend that all this is in conformity with the popular mind; only that there is no apparent reason why it should not be.

"Fantasia," for all its superior worth, is not flawless. Deems Taylor, as the picture's commentator and interpreter, seems at times a trifle redundant. One feels that he might have said all he had to say in one announcement, instead of seven. Stokowski's silhouette also becomes a bit of an impediment to the maintenance of the consciousness of pure imagery the picture evidently was intended to create. But these are minor matters in the large view of the courage, the effort and the time it required to make "Fantasia" the marvelous exhibition of musical and technical artistry it is.

The Technicolor treatment is superb. There are periods in all of the eight interludes that comprise the program that never have been equaled for sheer beauty. Disney has touched new heights in the art of animation by means that are incomprehensible to the layman. But there they are.

"Fantasia" is something that no discerning person will permit himself to miss.

'Robbers' Exciting

Excitement is the keynote of "Robbers of the Range," Tim Holt's new starring vehicle. The plot deals with the efforts of a group of crooks to buy up the rights of way for a new railroad-building in the West in the Eighties.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Having just awakened from the most entertaining nightmare I have ever experienced, I collect my wits for the task of commenting on the musical aspect of Walt Disney's "Fantasia." With a sigh of relief I realize that the cinematic and dramatic problems of the production are being discussed in the neighboring column by my theatrically erudite colleague, Mr. Nelson B. Bell. Mine is not the responsibility of criticizing certain obstrusive elements which seem to me disruptive of the artistic consistency in a tour de force of the imagination—such as the ubiquity of Deems Taylor, who disconcertingly materialized and dematerialized on the screen like a very voluble Cheshire cat, and the visions of the silhouette and the evocative hands of Leopold Stokowski. These glimpses of commentator and conductor "in person" recalled me too frequently from the phantasmagoric realm.

Inasmuch as every composition utilized as the basis for the film is thoroughly familiar, comments of any kind were superfluous. The remarks were particularly irritating at times when they took on a tone of elementary instruction in matters which all music lovers know. I suspect that Walt Disney allowed himself to be overruled in the admission of the talking interludes which interfere with the spectator's absorption in the seemingly inexhaustible flow of fancy. I further suspect that in the opening of the action he suggested two things: that many strange and incongruous ideas pass through the minds of composers at work, and that a similar processs occurs in the auditor's brain. In other words, he questions the existence of absolutely abstract music separated from all emotional and sensory connotations.

A Logical Pattern of Sounds

The beginning of the film—the shadowy assembling of the orchestral players and the tuning of the instruments—is the key to the Disneyan application of the fact that music stimulates the imagination. One sees in formation the many-headed and multiple-voiced monster that will presently speak harmoniously at the command of its master. What it is about to utter is a logical pattern of sounds created by those who think in sequences of tones. But on this occasion the listener is not allowed to make his own translation, for he has been turned into a spectator of a translation already made.

Deems Taylor informed us at once that the men concerned in the production were not musicians, but artists who had simply "tried to capture the moods, movements, situations, colors and characters which the music painted on the canvas of their imagination." After this statement of the obvious, the soundtrack started upon the Stokowski transcription of Bach's D minor toccata and fugue. This sumptous recording of the Philadelphia Orchestra was raised to a point of sonority and a peculiar quality of tone that no orchestra ordinarily achieves. As a musical performance it promised the visualization of grandeur in superhuman proportions.

What one saw on the screen is as impossible of verbal description as the playing of the color-organ, but is was not so well ordered. The suggestion of the orchestra was first carried out in the darting of violin bows, followed by symbolic undulations of strings and sinuous writhings of light. Color succeeded color in points, in discs, in whorls, in ribbons and in pinwheels. There was infinite ingenuity in movement and in shape, but there was no design corresponding to that of the music, and that left Bach out, for the essence of Bach in his abstract music is form and design.

Disney's Humor Is Freed

There was something better coming, however, and that was excerpts from Chaikovski's "Nutcracker" ballet suite. Here Walt Disney was free to disport his whimsical humor to the accompaniment of music that has no other purpose than the dance and no other form than choreographic rhythms. Disney did not draw his ideas from E. T. A. Hoffmann's fairy-tale, but from the reservoir of his own fancy. The Chinese dance, for example, was trod by mushrooms with a drollery that no ballet troupe can attain. The waltz of the flowers was turned into an enchanting dance of autumn leaves, diminutive fairies and milkweed seed ballerinas.

The selection of Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" as a vehicle for that unique comedian, Mickey Mouse, would not have offended the composer of the scherzo. Turning Stravinski's "Le Sacre du Printemps" into an exposition of the evolutionary hypothesis is another matter, although I understand that the composer has raised no objection and has even drily remarked that this must have been what was in his mind when he wrote the music.

With those who have raised their voices in shrieks of protest at the treatment of Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, I find myself in complete disagreement. This genial work is not so sacrosanct that it is impious to laugh at the pranks which it suggested to Disney, who has as much right as anyone else to let his whimsy play with what he hears.

Own Story Filmed By BoysTown Lads

Inspired by the two motion pictures, "Boys Town" and "Men of Boys Town," made at their school, the boys of the real-life Boys Town are making their own 16-mm. motion picture telling their own story.

This was revealed when Father Flanagan arrived in Hollywood to attend the luncheon given in honor of himself and Bishop James Hugh Ryan, of Omaha, by M-G-M in connection with the previewing of "Men of Boys Town," which again stars Spencer Tracy and Mickey Rooney. The boys have become movie-minded to such an extent Father Flanagan decided they should put their interest to practical use.

They not only will act in the picture, but direct, photograph, edit and cut it themselves, in addition to building all htair own settings.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, May 12.

With the heat of the summer came those checks signed by David Selznick as bonuses for his employees who had been with him three consecutive years. Those whose salary aws $100 a week got checks for $300, and the others were scaled accordingly.

HOPPER

That's the first time I've ever heard of this happening in our town, and what a happy precedent On the other hand, we've never had a picture as prolific as "Gone," and I hope we won't have to wait till we have another one like it until someone repeats the experiment.

Now that we've had a gander at George Montgomery in "The Man with the Shovel" (now called "Accent on Love"—ain't that something?), he's got the execs at Twentieth Century doing Indian dances, (cause he's the hot stone they're leaping over. What I'm trying to say is—he's good!

Speaking of titles, now that Bob and Bing have done "The Road to Singapore," "The Road to Zanzibar," their next will be either "The Foad to Bagdad," . . . "Morocco"" or "Moscow." Might I suggest it be "The Road to the U. S. A.," which is the only country anybody wants to come to now. We will now rise and sing "Hurray for the Red, White and Blue!"

Many wondered at the Red, White and Blue Ball why Martha Raye, in doing a strip tease, had her hands, and arms bandaged to the elbow. The reason was, she tangled with a fan propeller on the "Navy Blues" set and stripped skin off her arms. But that didn't prevent her doing her stuff for Ann Lehr's charity.

Tonight Paulette Goddard introduces her summer formals at a dance at Miramar — jewelled shorts! On her they look good. Marlene Dietrich put pants on the women of America—now Paulette's shortened the pants. If she could only restrict them to figures like hers!

Paulette has two days' rest before doing "Reap the Wild Wind." She says she's getting in training for it now by running from the stage to her dressing room. When she finishes the De Mille opus, she'll take a little house outside Mexico City and there learn Spanish, in case she's ever invited on a South American cruise. You've got to get up awfully early in the morning to get ahead of this one . . . Sam war news in papers, on the air, Goldwyn says we get enough and in newsreels—that's why he makes his pictures for entertainment only.

Incidentally, the Goldwyns entertain at dinner next week Victory Gazelet, member of Parliament, who came over on a mission for his government. He was entertained in New York by the Ogden Reids, and flies west to make speeches at our Douglas airplane plant and see his little protebee; 9-year-old Elizabeth Taylor, who's just been signed by Universal.

Otto Kruger gives this bit of advice to screen ovices: "Never read your press notices. If they're bad they'll break your heart, and if they're good they'll give you the swelled head!"

Star Claims Protean Mark

Marjorie Rambeau claims to be the quickest quick-change artist on the screen.

She attributes her speed to the training she received in 1915 when she was starring in "Eyes of Youth," the first play to use a revolving stage.

Miss Rambeau, now in "Three Sons O' Guns," remained on the stage throughout the play. When she finished one act, there would be a blackout. Marjorie, however, would have to continue her dialogue as the stage revolved. It took only two-and-a-half minutes before the lights were turned on and Marjorie once again faced her audience.

"As the stage revolved," Miss Rambeau recalls, "a girl jammed a wig on my head, another helped me put on my dress, a third helped me with my shoes, and a fourth assisted me with my makeup."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 12 (INS).—Marlene Dietrich just couldn't see herself as the heroine of "All Through the Night" and so she's bowed out of the Warner opus. Olivia de Havilland was chosen to replace her—and I must say that if Olivia is good for the part is probably wasn't right for Marlene, since they are so different. Besides, Marlene had a previous engagement at Columbia for "Miss Madden Is Willing," a lighter, more amusing role than she usually plays.

PARSONS

The battle between William Holden and Paramount is forgotten, and again Bill is in right. So right that "English Channel," a story by Leonard Lee, was bought for him as a starring vehicle. You'll see him as a Canadian parachute jumper who lands in a foreign country to get information and then swims back to London.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Mischa Auer and Joyce Hunter have set the date. They'll wed as soon as his divorce is final; Virginia Gilmore is completely fascinated with Fritz Lang; Dorothy Lee, who leaves soon to go into an operetta in St. Louis, dining tete-a-tete at Victor's with Roxy Rothafel; Norma Shearer dancing with Baron von Panz to Henry King's Orchestra at Ciro's.

Spencer Tracy, now on location in Florida, has 19 sunrise calls in "The Yearling," which means he gets up at 3:30 in the morning; Frank Morgan is buying a gold mine in northern California. Just as long as it isn't a gold brick; Joseph Cawthorne and William Collier, sr., both of whom have been so ill, got an ovation after their comedy skit at the Masquers; Nancy Kelly sporting a new topaz ring from Hubby Edmund O'Brien.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Broadcasters Seek to Quash Order on N.B.C.

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, May 12.—A vigorous fight and possibly court action to have the recent monopoly report of the Federal Communications Commission set aside was indicated today at the annual meeting of the National Association of Broadcasters.

The FCC ordered drastic changes in the relationship of individual stations and chain networks and requested the National Broadcasting Company to divest itself within 90 days of one of its two networks—Red and Blue—and of all stations except those in originating points.

Niles Trammel, president of N.B.C. declared following a directors' meeting that everything possible would be done to have the order quashed.

He said they were considering several avenues through which relief might be sought—Congress, the administrative agencies of the Government and the courts.

Similar expressions came from numerous executives of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Renewed praise of the order, however, came from top officials of the Mutual Broadcasting System, which also has split with N.B.C. and C.B.S. on restoring the music of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Hershey Asks Draft Revision

sidered by national headquarters, it was said, as well as proposals for blanket deferment of all married men or workers in key defense industries.

Deferment of the latter groups can best be handled by regulations and "education" of local board members, to a proper application of the "spirit of the act," officials said. Drafting of men under 21 is not considered advisable at present, they added.

At the same time, National Selective Service Headquarters directed local boards to go ahead immediately with the classification of the remaining 10,000,000 registrants on the draft lists. Heretofore, questionnaires have been issued only to fill immediate future needs.

Officials also said that under present plans the new group of men to be registered early in July—those who have become 21 since the act passed—will be placed at the end of the present lists after their order of call has been determined by another lottery.

Explaining the desire for younger men in the Army, Hershey said in his letter:

"Our experience discloses that a comparatively small percentage of men are being inducted from the higher age groups, and that many of our problems arise in connection therewith. I am informed that men in the younger age brackets are best qualified for the training and service contemplated under the act.

"Also, in view of the provisions for retaining the trainees in the Reserve for a period of ten years, it is desirable that the age of those trained be kept as low as the national interest will permit, so that the Reserve forces will be composed of men whose effectiveness will remain at a high level throughout that period."

The proposed bill submitted would add the following to Section 5e of the Selective Service Act:

"Anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, the President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment, by age group, from training and service under this act in the land and naval forces of the United States of those men whose age or ages are such that he finds their deferment to be advisable in the national interest; provided that the President may upon finding that it is in the national interest terminate, by age group, the deferment of any or all of the men so deferred."

In directing local board to proceed immediately with the classification of men remaining on the registration lists, no pressure is being put on them to rush the job through, national hedaquarters said.

A group of 36 local colored registants will be inducted this morning. They will go to Baltimore from local headquarters here.

The registrants and their board members include:

Police Official Seized in Plot To Rob Connecticut Bank

By the United Press

Putnam, Conn., May 12.—A State police dispatcher and a Putnam police commissioner were arrested today as leaders of a fantastic bank robbery plot.

The story involved a second State policeman posing as a safecracker trailing squad cars, acetylene torches, sawed-off shotguns, and all the details of a graded "B" motion picture thriller.

Under arrest on charges of conspiracy to rob and attempted robbery are Ralph C. Brearley, 37, Putnam, member of the board of aldermen and a police commissioner; State Policeman George Martin, 36, Danielson Barracks, and Walter Krzemien, 31, Hartford, a former Putnam resident.

The plot was revealed when Thomas J. Smith, of Hartford, told the Hartford Police Department that he had been approached by an acquaintance who asked him to become a safecracker.

Smith told the story to Hartford police. The State police barracks in Hartford was notified and State Policeman William E. MacKenzie substituted for Smith and posed as a safecracker.

The gang allegedly met in the hardware store of Brearley. With Brearley was Krzemien. According to police, Brearley showed Mackenzie a diagram of the Cargill Trust Co., told him that the bank's windows had been opened, the burglar alarm dismantled, and a tank of acetylene gas placed outside the bank window, police said.

Since the robbery was set for 3 a. m., the men passed the time driving to nearby towns to look over banks there.

Meanwhile, Mackenzie telephoned the State police barracks at Danielson. He reported that the State police radio dispatcher, Officer George Martin, allegedly was a conspirator. Martin's part was to withhold the alarm as long as possible and then to send the State police cars on a wild goose chase, he said. Martin was immediately arrested.

The State and Hartford police then set out to pick up Krzemien. As they approached the bank they heard gunshots. They found Krzemien, Smith and Mackenzie standing in an alley with their hands up. County Detective Rowe H. Wheeler and his assistant had been sitting in their office across the street. Seeing the men they had opened fire.

Krzemien was arrested there. Brearley was apprehended a few minutes later at his home.

Hess On The Hop

In his delightfully whimsical book, "The Flying Visit," which was published last August, Peter Fleming describes a fictional visit made by Hitler to England, the Fuehrer landing by parachute after his plane had blown up in the air. It now appears that truth has almost caught up with fiction or, as Oscar Wilde would put it, nature has again been engaged in imitating art. Instead of Hitler, the British now have in their midst Hitler's deputy. Rudolf Hess, who landed in Scotland Saturday night. In Fleming's book the Englishmen to whom Hitler sought to reveal his identity would not believe him. In fact, they gave their visitor a prize for putting on an imitation of the Fuehrer at a masquerade. Similarly, there was considerable skepticism in British official circles even after the dark-visaged, heavy eyebrowed visitor who first tried to hide his identity finally admitted who he really was. It was not until a Foreign Office official who had known Hess before the war flew to the Glasgow hospital, where the No. 3 Nazi was nursing a broken leg, and assured himself that Hess was really Hess, that the sensational news was finally given out.

Just why Hess fled Germany, his bosom friend Hitler [who he accompanied to jail in 1923] and the Nazi party [in which he was, next to the Fuehrer, the most powerful figure] is not yet clear. The German government, in a succession of statements each differing from the one before, has suggested that Hess was suffering from mental derangement. Perhaps in Nazi Germany, only the insane are sane. In any event, the flight of Rudolf Hess straight into the camp of the enemy will not make pleasant reading in Germany, if the Germans are ever allowed to read it. Possibly they will insist that the Hess now in a Glasgow hospital is an impostor, that the real Hess was killed in a plane crash, even as the Berlin communique insists he was. But while the Nazis have been remarkably successful in turning live into dead men—they have done so in hundreds of thousands of cases—Hess may be one officially dead man they will not be able to keep dead.

Charity Octopus

In these parlous times charity has become such a huge business that the survey of the President's Committee on War Relief Agencies under Joseph E. Davies is most opportune. Mr. Davies estimates that no fewer than 700 organizations are collecting funds from the American people for war relief and other charitable purposes. This year they will get between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000 of which $250,000,000 will go for direct foreign relief and for the American Red Cross.

But the survey is useful for more than fact-finding. It should provide the information needed to eliminate duplication of effort and weed out grafters and racketeers. So far few cases of fraud have been brought out, but that does not make this aspect of the investigation any the less essential for mistake of judgment, carelessness and inexperience are chiefly responsible for waste of money given to good causes. Some of the questions which Mr. Davies' body asked of the war relief organizations are revealing of the kind of loose practices that have to be guarded against. Organizations were asked, for instance, whether they have been in touch with diplomatic representatives of the countries for which funds are being collected and whether they have checked to determine the availability of shipping space for supplies to be sent abroad. It appears that at least 50 per cent of the smaller war relief agencies interrogated, have no direct constant diplomatic contacts—a fact that at once puts them on trial before public opinion.

Full publicity concerning the amount and disposition of funds collected and expenses of operation are the best means of protecting donors against waste or misapplication of their gifts. However, the multiplicity of agencies necessarily increases salaries and other overhead charges. Expenses could be reduced by eliminating some organizations or coordinating fund-raising efforts. The fact that the Davies Committee is relying upon publicity and friendly advice to bring about self-reform in most instances indicates that the system of voluntary contributions is justifying itself, despite occasional and inevitable abuses growing out of unregulated gift-giving.

Menzies' Tocsin

Newspaper correspondents say there was a hush in London this weekend after the most savage bombing which the Nazis have launched on the British. The British were picking up their dead. They were putting out the fires. They were trying to restore their broken lives in a little less disorder. They were looking silently at the scarred and gashed monuments to man's fight for freedom down the ages which will never be the same again. Here in America we wondered—and how many times have we wondered?—whether there had been any damage to that miracle of our times, British morale. And an Australian visitor to our shores gave us the answer at the National Press Club in Washington yesterday. It was a triumphant No.

Premier Menzies was the visitor, and he knew whereof he spoke. Not for him the role of Macaulay's New Zealander, who merely toted up the material remains of Albion. Mr. Menzies had observed what was happening to the spirit of Britain. In Miltonic accents he declared that "every time a hammer blow falls, their temper becomes keener, their strength greater." It was, indeed, a tonic to hear this vibrant Australian. He spoke of the British spirit with the passionate pride of one who shares the British heritage. But he could explore the taproots of this spirit as an Australian onlooker, too. The tenacity of the British people, according to the Prime Minister, comes from their "sense of continuity." And nations, like men, are not easily cast down when they stand for an ethos which is so impermeable.

Nothing could be truer than Mr. Menzies' explanation. Emerson divined it. The British, he said, are of all people those who stand firmest in their shoes. It was well to have somebody of the commanding authority of the Australian Prime Minister to give the testimony. The British themselves can call attention to this virtue of theirs only by way of refuting the whisper that their upturned thumbs are sagging. Indeed, they have rejoiced when the spotlight has been turned on the Finns, the Greeks, the Yugoslavs and the peoples in the occupied countries. It is time now to give them the tribute which is so richly theirs. For if they should fall, the hope of millions of Hitler's slaves would be damped out. And tyranny would get such a territorial and material hold on the world that the cause of freedom would be forced back to a last line of defense in this continent.

It is for this reason that the Australians are manning the front line. The world knows, and future generations will read, of the valiant deeds of their soldiers. Not so well known is that in the factory and on the farm the Australians are wasting not a minute in "giving the stuff" to the men in the fighting line. By 20 times, according to the Prime Minister, Australia's industrial output has been raised under the war effort. Yet these people are thousands of miles away from the scene of action. Why are they harnessing themselves so wholeheartedly to the British chariot? Not primarily because of ties of blood, and not because of political affiliations. It is because they realize that if Hitler wins, their own freedom would be imperiled.

This was the issue which Mr. Menzies addressed to his American audience. If Hitler wins, would you feel a freer man? Of course not. On the contrary, freedom everywhere, and particularly in this last great home of it, would have its back to the wall. It is absurd to think that Hitler would give us the peace and neighborliness which we enjoyed in the world regime which he would supersede. In that knowledge our own liberties require that we gird our own effort into that 100 per cent efficiency which has been produced in Australia. We have Mr. Menzies' word for it that the great little people of Britain are no "calculators" in this war, but are staking their all on their honor.

Do They Care?

The Surplus Marketing Administration recently announced its intention of encouraging production of hog and dairy products by "putting a floor" under prices of pork and dairy products while keeping the loan rate on corn at the present 75 per cent of parity level. The Post pointed out at the time that the program seemed sound if the corn growers could be persuaded to cooperate. But we warned that there was "good reason to fear that the knowledge that hog prices are to be raised as a matter of Government policy will give impetus to the current movement to lift prices of other farm products to higher levels by means of parity or near-parity loans." Our pessimism appears to have been well founded. For a House-Senate conference committee is reported to have agreed to recommend to Congress that it accept the proposal embodied in a Senate bill for raising loans on cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco and rice to 85 per cent of parity instead of the 75 per cent rate approved by the House.

If Congress approves this plan, it will play havoc with the buying program of the Surplus Marketing Administration. For under this plan corn prices would be boosted and farmers would be discouraged from fattening live stock unless the Government raised its minimum buying price for hogs. Some officials state that the minimum for hogs would probably have to be raised from $9 to $10 per hundred pounds, with proportionate increases for poultry, eggs and butter. The SMA plan was designed to increase surpluses of farm products particularly needed by Great Britain, and at the same time prevent any pronounced rise in prices that would increase the cost of aid and lift domestic food prices unduly. If the 85 per cent parity loan program should go through, as seems likely, both purposes would be frustrated. Domestic consumers would have to pay considerably more for pork and dairy products—possibly from 10 to 20 per cent more—and the Surplus Marketing Administration would likewise need a good deal more money to carry through the British aid program on the contemplated scale.

This is another one of those cases showing lack of teamwork between Congress and the Administration. The conflict is especially unfortunate in this instance because the Department of Agriculture is following a procedure that endeavors to do justice both to the farm producer and to the ultimate consumer. Congress, however, seems to be bent on boosting farm prices, regardless of the effect upon living costs.

Congested Payday

Residents of Washington, whether they are in Government or in private employment, always know when pay day arrives. For twice each month they are subjected to major and minor inconveniences and held up by traffic congestion because of the Government's practice of paying most of its employes on the fifteenth and the thirtieth of the month.

But the inconvenience is worse for the payees. Thousands of Government employes are compelled to stand in long lines before bank windows waiting to get checks cashed. They waste more time waiting to pay gas, electric and other bills. With cash in hand, they and their families enter stores and restaurants only to encounter more maddening delays and bad service from harassed clerks and waiters. The losses resulting from purchases of unsuitable or inferior goods under such unfavorable conditions undoubtedly runs into large sums. And this situation in turn reacts upon other customers who, inadvertently or from necessity, enter the city's banks, stores, and restaurants on payday, or search vainly for seats in trolleys and buses.

The rapid and continuing increase in the numbers on Government pay rolls as well as the general growth in population makes each payday worse than its predecessor and emphasizes the need for remedial action. The public is, in consequence, becoming interested in various plans for staggering paydays. One proposal which has been under discussion provides for four paydays per month. Another, more ambitious plan would make every working day except Saturday payday for a certain percentage of Government employes. That is, every individual employe would be paid twice monthly as at present, but payday dates would be changed so as to spread disbursements throughout the month. A third possible method of staggering payments calls for payments every two weeks instead of twice monthly. Under that arrangement, for example, certain Government departments might pay their workers every alternate Monday; other departments might select alternate Tuesdays, and so on.

Of course, any system of staggering would entail delays in receipt of checks in some cases. However, if a Government worker, customarily paid on the fifteenth of the month, had to wait three or four days for his first payment under a new plan, he could easily be taken care of by means of an adjustment check covering the interim period. It also seems reasonable to assume that community cooperation could be counted upon to make a success of any rational plan for doing away with payday congestion. Certainly such a plan would make life in the Nation's Capital easier for the thousands on Government pay rolls as well as for their relatives, friends and neighbors.

HAYING

Copper fills the molten sky, and limp air
Fevers all where perfumes lie on mown stair.
Brown and black are harnessed,
beneath glow;
Brawny forkfuls rise from piled and heaped row;
Fragrant load is trundled, slows
a-down hill,
Mounded high. The stack grows,
the sides fill,
Shaggy sweet—a rolling ship,
a-sail there
Over stubbled rise and dip, the way fair.
Soar the bladed pinions far of still hawk
Over sward and billy bar

Let no menials find this way,
nor light pen:
Bend the sweet earth, blend the hay,

Tribute to Dr. Simon

Twenty-four hours before he was beaten to death, Dr. Heinrich Simon was playing sonatas with me—sonatas of Mozart and Debussy, and also his own last composition for violin and piano, which he had just completed that morning. And it is because of the acute awareness that one has of a musical personality when one actually makes music with him that I feel impelled to pay tribute to him.

Dr. Simon was more than a musician, musicologist and newspaper editor. He was more because each of these facets of his personality inter-penetrated the other and thus served to create a man greater than his parts.

The musicology of this man was not of the dry as dust variety, was no mere gathering of information. The facts that he gathered were immediately enkindled by his musical temperament into creative ideas, were made to glow with imaginative life. And his personality, his experience as man of affairs, as well as his pre-Hitler German background enabled him to penetrate through the abstractness of music to its socio-philosophical meaning. He had the sensory and intellectual fusion of perception that enabled him to hear in Beethoven's music the world in which Beethoven lived. This unique understanding he gave to those Washingtonians who were privileged to attend his lectures.

But the grief that one feels on losing Heinrich Simon takes its depth from something other and more than those matters. One weeps inwardly over the human soul that he was. For he had profundity without solemnity. He played the piano with a passionate intensity, he felt music with his whole being, but he was as gay as a bird, urbane, beautifully skeptical and witty. He had all the wonderful charm of an "old German professor" (can one forget the glasses perpetually sliding from his forehead and the loose lock of hair never in place?) with the dynamic aliveness of the Berlin that was. And the manner in which this dynamism caused him to speak in thrusts with pauses occasioned by his imperfect English—it was nothing less than lovable.

Dissension In The Ranks

In the name of every parent of every boy in Company I, Fifth Regiment, Roosevelt High School, I protest the decision of the judges on the results of Tuesday's competitive drill in putting Company I in thirty-first place out of 32 companies.

Company I had everything: Snap, precision, accuracy and achievement. According to at least ten Service men, spectators at the drill, Company I was a close second to Company K of Western, if not actually tied for first place.

I call upon the parents of these boys to demand a recheck of the records. I urge them to voice their indignation, for Company I had the goods and delivered them!

Roosevelt High School must remove this blight upon the honor of the Fifth Regiment and it is up to the parents to help at once.

Clear Thinking

A fine piece of clear thinking of great practical value was Mr. Volk's letter "Of Criticism" in The Post of May 5. It properly evaluates the irresponsible advice of men like Lindbergh, which only brings confusion in a course to which we are already committed and must press forward with a minimum of friction.

I would like to see it published daily and a copy sent to each reactionary member of the Senate—that bottle-neck in our Government, where we seem to be at the mercy of inferior men, by whom a President has more than once been defeated in the purpose for which he was elected, and often by his own party!

Fellow citizens, keep yourselves informed, we and others are already paying dear for the Senate action of 1919. Another such will destroy us. A VIRGINIA WOMAN.

War, Now

Mrs. Roosevelt was asked, after a recent speech in Los Angeles, if the President would keep his promise and keep us out of war. What the President said was that we would not fight a foreign war; but the vast majority of Americans do not think that aiding Britain, even to the extent of sending convoys and an air force, would be participating in a foreign war.

The passing of the Lend-Lease bill proves this; also the latest Gallop Poll findings. If we do not support Britain to the utmost and do it promptly, it will be our defeat, should she perish. It would not then be up to us whether or not we keep out of war, but it would be Hitler's choice of where and how to fight us. He would be the one to declare war on us. Those who prefer to fight here . . . in America . . . will then have their opportunity, with all its brutal consequences.

It would seem that genuine Americans should much prefer to go after the enemy now and defeat him, rather than run the risk of his desecrating our shores, bombing our homes, brutally attacking our civilian population, maiming and killing our children, as well as feeble old men and women.

JOHN BOOTH.
New York City, May 6.

As an ex-commissioned officer of the A. E. F., and one who is willing to serve again and has a son already in the U. S. Army, I call upon all true Americans to halt our muddling politicians in their present antics and to stop the dilly-dallying and foolish vacillation in the matter of war or not-to-war. Nero fiddled while Rome burned and Congress is playing dangerous politics with our future, while Hitler, with his puppets, Italy, Japan and Russia, continues to rampage.

If all-out-aid is at all necessary, for the preservation of democratic ideals and institutions and to prevent defeat for Great Britain, it is now, not next month or next year. In my opinion the quickest way to break the war at its backbone, is that, without further ado, our Navy, with the assistance of the British and Dutch ships of war now in the Far East, proceed at once to strike down the Japanese fleet and merchant marine. This will not only relieve pressure on our West Coast, on China, Indo-China, the Dutch East Indies, and Australia, but also release a greater part of our Pacific fleet for service in the Atlantic, placing great Britain and ourselves in a position to close in on Hitler et al for the final showdown, without chancing a stab in the back were the Japanese fleet left free to act in concert with further moves of the Nazis. Again, this will halt material aid now reaching Germany via Japan and Russia.

If this war is to be won, we have got to use the Hitler method of initiative, with all power at our command, and, in the winning, we should not be content with any cry of "Kamerad" as in the last war, but should carry the fight to the very door steps of the German people, so that they will experience fully the horrors of war that they have not hesitated for a second time in 25 years to impose on their neighbors. In other words, this time the defeat of Germany must be military in the fullest sense of the word and not economic. Until that is done, we will continue to cry for peace, when there is no peace.

Posing A Problem

Is it to be wondered at that generals refuse to give up their golf courses for an Army Camp when the Federal Government won't give up certain park areas for sorely needed parking space for the cars of defense workers?

Favor Immediate Entry Into War

The United States has undertaken to help Britain win the war. We are so definitely committed to that undertaking that we could not abandon it with honor even if we would. Our own national security also requires such aid to England, and the preservation of the British navy. It is inconceivable that we would acknowledge ourselves beaten before we have begun to fight. Why, then, instead of doing our fighting by proxy, do we not throw our whole weight into the conflict?

With everything except our armed forces we are already engaged in the war—a war against the most ruthless and powerful antagonist, who is rapidly overcoming our ally and whose overthrow will require our utmost efforts. We have an army of over a million men, a Navy second to none in the world, with nearly half a million men and several hundred warships, and several thousands of skilled aviators, all trained for just such a contest, and we refuse or hesitate to use them. It does not make sense.

The Gallup polls indicate that nearly all our people want to help England, and that more than two-thirds of them favor our full entry into the war if that is necessary to prevent her defeat. But it is the height of folly to wait until we are sure that she will be defeated without our help, for then it may be too late for her to win with our help. Hitler's war machine moves with lightning-like rapidity, as we have seen during the last year.

If we go in now we can, in conjunction with England, win the war. We can win it even if she loses the Mediterranean, including Gibraltar and Suez, because we can overcome the submarines, as we did in 1918, and win the Battle of the Atlantic. We can also build more, and just as good if not better, aircraft than Germany, and with our bombers and fighter planes we can win the war without landing a soldier in continental Europe.

But we should begin the destruction of German submarines and the convoying of supply ships at once, before Britain's greatly imperiled life line is cut off. Our naval and air forces should be sent into the conflict immediately, before it is too late. OSCAR D. WEED.

The Post Impressionist

Love's Labor Lost

Why doesn't some botanical-minded Bertillon devise a system for fingerprinting green fingers, the Gypsy way of describing those with the knack of growing things in the earth? Some such classification is really in the public interest, for there are a great many people suffering from delusions of gardening. If there were just some way of determining which ones have no possible chance of success, then there could be laws to protect them from buying so much as a five-cent packet of poppy seeds.

But to get down to particular cases, if my husband and I had the money we've sunk in flower seeds and bedding plants, fertilizers and sprays, cotton gloves and tools, not to mention labor and liniment, we would have a considerably smaller part of the mortgage to pay off. For that matter, the mortgage would never have been so big in the first place, for if our deadly bacterial effect on plant life had been foreseen, we'd have been content with a 40-foot frontage and a two-foot strip of concrete lawn, instead of buying half an acre of wooded lot with a sunny spot that the agent said would make an ideal flower garden. He didn't know us, but then, as I say, neither did we.

Thank goodness, though, we didn't have money enough for the down payment on that modest little country estate which, in our innocence, we wanted so badly—the one with 20 acres, a stream, a vegetable garden, a small orchard and a formal flower garden already laid out.

I don't know. Maybe we try too hard. We turn to "The Gardener's Calendar" for a cross section of potted opinion even before we read the Gallup Poll each Sunday. We're on the list of every seed mail-order firm in the country, and when the new catalogues come we sit down with them and a gardener's manual that shows you how to plan for a progression of blooms from March to January, and we make out an order that unbalances the budget no end.

When the seeds come, we read the directions carefully and then load up the back of our car with empty vegetable hampers—proof in themselves that somebody has made something grow—and go on a dirt-snitching safari. We want to be sure we have on hand to fill our flats exactly the types of soil our seeds call for.

These range from "rich wood dirt" to "sandy loam," and the obtainment thereof always exposes us to blood poisoning from barbed wire, "no trespassing" penalties, brambles and, in season, poison ivy, but such risks must be met with courage if we are to offset the Virginia concrete that is the foundation stone of our acreage.

Returning with what we hope will qualify as wood dirt or loam, we haul the flats out of the basement, see that the drainage holes are ready to function, and run our newly acquired soil through a wire sieve to extract such extraneous matter as rocks, rusty tin cans and parts of old shoes. Then we pulverize it even further by crushing the remaining lumps between determined fingers, finally pour the soil into the boxes as carefully as if it were the batter for an angel food cake.

We are then ready to follow such specific directions as: "Sprinkle the seeds on top and firm the soil lightly with your hand or a thin board. Then sprinkle lightly a fine covering of soil over the seeds to a depth of about one-eighth of an inch. Keep the bed moist, but avoid washing the seeds away. Shade with a newspaper or cloth until the seedlings appear."

Last year this was such a gratifying experience! Every flat was positively lush with tender, promising green! We hardly knew where to place the credit for such hundred per cent germination—with our own painstaking efforts or the seed company. Then we noticed something odd. Every seedling, from arabis to zinnia, was exactly alike! For a few days we kept up our spirits, even transplanting some of the hardiest plants to see whether garden environment would bring out definite family traits. It did. The ragweed dormant in our rich wood dirt had not sifted out with the old shoes—nothing else had come up!

We carted the whole business back to the dump heap and went to a greenhouse to shop for plants. That heavenly blue scabiosa would be heavenly in our fluted spode bowl, but scabiosa is an annual and we know our limitations in this respect, at least. We couldn't go through agony to have something live only one summer if at all.

"Nothing but perennials, please," we said firmly.

The greenhouse man was sympathetic if not tactful. "Anybody," he said, "can grow zinnias and these hardy cut-and-come agains."

We took them home like two dozen eggs in a paper sack and waited till the sun went down. We troweled out a roomy little hole, filled it with water, and set the plant in with due care for the tiny hair roots. Then we masured six inches of intervening space and repeated the operation. The alarm clock was set, and we got up next morning to water before the sun was hot, and to cover with little newspaper tents. Then on our knees we said a little prayer.

Time passed and new perils and uncertainties beset us. After one experience, we were ruthlessly suspicious, and pulled up something we knew was ragweed, but which a post mortem revealed to be verbena, planted the year before and just now coming up. A roaming sitter insisted on a daily sun bath among the pansies kindly donated by a neighbor. When the cut-and-come-agains were about to bloom, we noticed a horde of little black bugs. They could have been any of several garden insects, so we sprayed with a variety of mixtures. But seemingly the bugs had gas masks. The rose bushes we had nursed so lovingly were about to bloom when along came the reconnaissance squad for the Japanese beetles and ate out the hearts of the buds—ours, too!

But now it is spring again, and our hopes flower perennially if nothing else does. We are going to try it once more, and then if we fail, move back into an apartment—an apartment where the only dirt is under the bed or in a window box. Come to think of it, maybe we could succeed with just one window box . . . but I am afraid that that, too, is just a vain hope.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Are Americans Really Divided?

FOR SOME WEEKS now, the public debate in this country has been out of touch with the actual movement of events. The unofficial debaters on both sides of the argument, and those who conduct the Gallup Polls, about "convoys" or about whether we should "declare war" have been assuming the existence of a state of affairs which in fact is rapidly ceasing to exist. They have been assuming that there is a war in Europe on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean and that the question is how much we shall intervene in that trans-Atlantic war.

LIPPMANN

IN ACTUAL FACT, the state of affairs is quite different than the debaters assume it to be and the question which confronts informed and responsible men is a quite different question. For with the opening of the spring offensive in the Mediterranean it developed that there was involved not merely the fate of Egypt and Suez, but Spain, Portugal, French North Africa, and the Atlantic islands—the Azores, the Canaries, and the Cape Verdes. The war, in other words, is about to move far out into the Atlantic. If these positions are occupied by Hitler, he will be much nearer to South America than we are. His bases will be much nearer to the United States and Canada than any of our bases are to Europe. He will be nearer to the West Indies and the Caribbean than Japan would be to California if the Japanese had occupied Hawaii.

To be sure Hitler is not yet in Spain, Portugal, North Africa and the Atlantic islands. But he may be in Spain and Portugal and North Africa within a few months, and if he is unopposed, in the Atlantic islands as well. The real question arising out of this momentous development of events is not whether we shall intervene in a trans-Atlantic war. It is whether Hitler is to establish himself in the middle of the Atlantic within striking distance of North and Central America and in control of the routes from South America not only to Europe, but to North America. Mr. Hoover said on Sunday evening that "we are united in resolution to defend the Western Hemisphere from military aggression." There is every indication that this resolution will be put to the test not at some comparatively distant time in the future, but long before the summer of 1941 is over.

WE HAVE BEEN told by Col. Lindbergh and now by Mr. Hoover that we are a divided people. In so far as we are divided, leaving out of consideration the subversive minority, it is because the true position of things is still in the making and is, therefore, not yet obvious to all. Nor is it easy, we ought to realize, for a responsible official to make it perfectly clear. With things hanging precariously in the balance in France and in Spain and in Portugal, it would be very imprudent for, let us say, the Secretary of State to proclaim to the world that Marshal Petain and Gen. Franco will be forced to surrender, that Spain, which is still neutral, will join the Axis or be invaded. The defense of American vital interests by diplomatic means requires that every conceivable effort be made to prevent or postpone a development of the war which would pose at once as grave an issue as we have ever had to decide.

But at the same time the defense of American vital interests in the Western Hemisphere requires that our armed forces be made ready and that as a people we prepare ourselves mentally and morally for an eventuality which may, in literal fact, explode in the very near future.

IF WE REALLY grasped the situation, we should cease to spend our energy arguing about convoys or patrols, about whether we are going to declare war, about whether we are going to land great armies in Europe, and we should cease deluding ourselves with the now obsolete catchphrases about aid to Britain, all out, or short of this or short of that. For we should realize that what we are now in the process of deciding is none of these things, but how to prevent Hitler from advancing so far out into the Atlantic Ocean that he can attack the Western Hemisphere more easily than we can defend it.

If the question were put to the country, will you let Japan occupy Hawaii, there would be no doubt about the answer. Well, the question which is looming up for us on the Atlantic horizon, which some see clearly and others have not yet seen clearly, is far more urgent. It is: Will you let Hitler cut us off from South America and establish his bombers and submarines and his surface war vessels in the middle of what is now the very narrow Atlantic Ocean? It is no distance at all by air from the Azores to Newfoundland, from the Cape Verde Islands and Dakar to the sea routes to South America. The last time the Western Hemisphere was invaded from Europe, in 1898, the Spanish fleet left the Portuguese Cape Verde Islands on April 29, touched at the French West Indies Island, Martinique, on May 11, coaled at the Dutch West Indain Island of Curacao on May 15, and arrived at Santiago in Cuba on May 19. The Spanish navy was, fortunately, most inefficient. The question today is whether we shall allow ourselves to be put in a position where there can be organized a similar attack against any one of a dozen vital spots in the Western Hemisphere while we stand by waiting for it to be launched.

THOUGH THE theoretical and unreal issues divide us, the practical issue—once presented—will unite us. The only question is whether our people will see the practical issue before it is an accomplished fact and while there is time to forestall it—that is before Hitler is actually moving out into the Atlantic — or whether, like every other democracy, they will not believe that their zone of vital security is invaded until the invasion is actually under way. The answer to the question depends upon the foresight and courage of our leaders and upon whether we have the character to face the facts fully.

But one thing is clear—when the real issue is posed—the unity of this country will be far closer than anyone would imagine from listening to the current debate. Here, for example, is an interesting excerpt from the testimony on the lend-lease bill by Col. Robert McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune:

Senator Pepper—Let us suppose that Hitler should conquer England as he has conquered France. Let us also suppose that he should conquer Portugal as he has conquered France, and that he set up puppet governments in both Portugal and England as he may in France. Then suppose those puppet governments, one of them owning the Azores and the other having the controlling fleet, decided that that would be a Hitler base at the Azores. Then what would you recommend that we do?

Col. McCormick—Get there first.

Senator Pepper—That would mean what?

Col. McCormick—Just as Gen. Jackson did in Florida. I would go right in and take them. That is how we got Florida.

Senator Pepper—Having a little faith myself in the policy of an affirmative defense. I am wondering whether you are committed yourself to that doctrine. Is it your idea, then, that what America needs to do to defend itself is to defend itself wherever its interests are? Is that correct?

Col. McCormick—Yes.

Senator Pepper. Is that your policy?

Col. McCormick—Yes.

Senator Pepper. So that if you thought there was a real danger, or a great likelihood that the Axis powers were about to occupy the Azores as their base, you would recommend that our Navy get there first and occupy that as a base?

Col. McCormick—Precisely.

Senator McCormick: Suppose Hitler declared war on us for doing that?

Col. McCormick—Then we would have a fight. Those Germans are not so tough. I have been up against them, and there is no use being scared of them. So we may be sure that while theoretical argument divides us the practical issues will unite us.

The R. A. F. Comes Here

ANOTHER encouraging sign of the passing of the era of futility in Washington is the quiet completion of plans for a big program for training British air pilots on American soil. The program itself is fully roughed out. The legal obstacles have been surmounted or conjured away. The necessary facilities and personnel are being contracted for. And unless there is a completely unforeseen upset, young candidates for the R. A. F. will soon be receiving their preliminary training here at the rate of 3,000 a year.

The apprentice flyers will come from Britain and the Empire in batches of 1,200, for a 20-week course that is to carry them up to the combat-training stage. The course will be given at six of the large American flying schools, at fields now being selected. Two of the fields will be in California, in the Los Angeles-San Diego area; one will be in Florida near Miami, and one each in Texas, Oklahoma and Georgia.

By an elaborate arrangement between the British and American authorities, the required training planes and all other materials, including what may be needed to build dormitories and the like for the trainees, will be leased-loaned to the British by the Army. The British Air Ministry will then pay for the building, and carry the flying school contracts for instructors, mechanics and supervisors. Nor is this six-school 3,000-trainee program more than a mere beginning. Training planes are now coming off our production lines in quantity. It will soon be possible to do twice as much—indeed, much more than twice as much. The day can be foreseen when all R. A. F. apprentice pilots will get the bulk of their instruction here, or in Canada, or elsewhere in the Empire, returning to the firing line only to be put in shape for actual fighting.

THE NEW STEP is more than a reaffirmation of the American policy of all aid to Britain. It is also an important strategic maneuver. In order to undertake the air counteroffensive against Germany when America's bombers are ready, the British must have every usable air field cleared for action. The removal from Britain of pilot-training will release highly usable field space and field facilities for other purposes. Thus the claim of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, that the British do not have the fields from which to undertake an air counteroffensive, has already in part been answered by action.

It is tragic, of course, that the step was not taken long before. The British first suggested they would like to train pilots here very shortly after the fall of France. At that time it was thought politically unadvisable, and the State Department, in its usual role of obstacle builder, raised objections. Thereafter some relaxations of the rules were permitted. American volunteers for the R. A. F. were allowed to get their training here at schools paid by the air ministry. Because the problem was so critical, a number British bomber crews were permitted to resign from the R. A. F. and come to this country as ostensible civilians, to learn how to handle the American giant bombers in classes at Wright Field. But it was not until after the passage of the lease-lend bill that Maj. Gen. H. H. Arnold was able to tell the British that the way was clear for a big program.

Again, the legal hocus-pocus that has to be gone through seems slightly silly, and not a little infuriating, in view of the crude realities of the war situation. Despite the best efforts of the able young lawyers on Harry L. Hopkins' central staff, it took two months to straighten out the various legal tangles. As it is, the apprentice pilots will come here on the official errand of learning ferry and transport flying. This is a disadvantage, as was proved at Wright Field, where very young men fresh from 18 months of black-out, removed from all authority, and preparing for work of desperate danger, rather naturally showed a tendency to put more energy into pleasure than study. But the main thing is that the delay and the hocus-pocus are, over, and the work can now begin.

THE BRITISH-AMERICAN air-training program is particularly striking, at this time, as an example of the sort of helpful and effective war project that can be carried out with the greatest ease, given a little time, a little good will, and plenty of cooperation. At this crisis of the war, the most intelligent officers, both British and American, are increasingly convinced of the need for a joint strategy committee, for the double purpose of initiating such projects as the new air-training program, and passing on the much larger problems that now daily confront the two countries.

Informal liaisons already exist, both with the Army and Navy, being maintained by high-ranking British army, navy and air officers now in this country. Yet when the effectiveness of cooperation is so clearly demonstrated in little, it would seem only sensible to place the cooperative effort on a broad, continuous basis.

Radio Gland Surgeon To Seek Senate Seat

Austin, Tex., May 12 (AP).—Dr. John Brinkley, gland surgeon who made three spectacular but unsuccessful races for Governor in Kansas, has entered the race for the Senate seat of the late Morris Sheppard at the June 28 special election.

Nearly a score of aspirants are already in the contest, including Representative Martin Dies, Representative Lyndon Johnson and Attorney General Gerald C. Mann. W. Lee O'Daniel, twice elected Governor, has indicated he might run under certain conditions.

Pan Americanism

By Glen Levin Swiggett

Recognizing Cultural Considerations

RECURRING press statements seem to challenge the results of our Government's efforts towards hemispheric unity of action. Recently a State Department official stated before a Foreign Policy Conference in Washington that "we face the possibility of being confronted, virtually alone, by a world-wide totalitarian alliance against us. An article by Barnet Nover in The Post of April 25 stated that the curve of hemispheric solidarity seems to rise and fall with favorable or unfavorable news from the European war. These two authoritative statements seem to imply that as Europe goes, so goes Latin America. They strengthen the belief of many that we may again fail to hold the friendship of Latin-American governments in matters of vital concern to us. Why should this be?

Commerce brings contiguous United States and Latin America into a peculiar relation. Why is this not more intimate and dependable? Why does the United States, after more than a century of effort for some kind of continental solidarity, have to resort today, in order to secure hemispheric defense, to measures that can only defeat in time the real purpose of Pan Americanism? For friendship among nations built upon gifts in exchange for economic and political advantage is as fragile as gossamer. Subject to popular caprice and sudden change of government, it snaps easily, especially in Latin America.

In 1823 the United States assumed with the Monroe Doctrine a special and self-protective interest toward Latin America. Sixty-seven years later this interest was directed to commercial objectives. To this end it has initiated since 1890 more than 200 inter-American conferences, large and small. The Latin-American states have participated in these, it is true, but seldom all at one time and never wholeheartedly. A primary cause for this reluctance lies, perhaps, in the conflict between two apparently irreconcilable cultures. In Latin America, culture is not commerce. The effort, therefore, to identify or correlate them in any inter-American program tends to defeat Pan American objectives.

FUNDAMENTALLY the Latin-American peoples are indifferent to the material advantages of a purely commercial civilization, lacking real spiritual ends. And while it is true that individuals in public office as well as private life can be subsidized into the acceptance of commercial conventions, such relationships with the governments of Latin America have not been perdurable. They endure only so long as they are personally pleasant or profitable. Furthermore, Spanish America seems to resist culture currents flowing from the United States. After more than a century, only two men of letters with an assured place in American culture, Poe and Whitman, have been accepted generously into the Spanish-American culture stream. The present drive for continental defense may result in a temporary and favorable change in the attitude of Latin America towards United States culture. If the effort, however, continues to assume the aspect of an almost frontal attack upon traditional Spanish culture, it faces failure, especially since the translations into Spanish of contemporary American liberal, even radical, writers whose viewpoint is not only antagonistic to the political philosophy of Spanish-American military leaders but whose position in American cultural history is by no means assured.

Conflicting currents that essentially inhere in the present war are converging upon Latiin America. One is commercial; cultural, the other. One obtains its temporary ends through governments, even unfriendly, by pragmatic processes of diplomacy; its conventions and pacts, instruments of an hour, are disregarded by succeeding governments. A culture current, however, affects a nation at its roots and flows slowly into the life stream of that nation. These two currents meet in Latin America in vital opposition.

THE DIFFERING purpose of Pan Americanism and Hispanism reflects this opposition. The responsive reaction of Spanish America to Pan America Day, April the fourteenth, commemorative of the First Pan American Conference and the establishment of the Pan American Union in Washington in 1890, and to the Day of the Race, October the twelfth, is a convincing test of the affection of the Spanish-speaking nations for Spain. Spanish culture is reflected in their creative expression and binds them to the mother country, in spite of occasional, but momentary, differences of political ideologies. While Pan Americanism aspires to unity of effort in political and economic affairs, the chief concern of Spanish Americanism has always been with that deep culture current that flows steadily on from Spain to her former colonies.

The Spanish-American culture stream has always reflected conditions in the mother country. Whenever the creative spirit of Spain was crippled by church or state, a similar situation could be seen in Spanish America. Spain has furnished both urge and model for all succeeding schools and periods. French-inspired romanticism, sweeping northward from Argentina, never became a definite movement until it was formed under the shaping hand of Spanish romanticists like Zorrilla and Espronceda. The modernist movement of Ruben Dario and his contemporaries was definitely Spanish, inspired by Zorrilla, Campoamor, Becquer and Nunez de Arce. The recent anniversary tribute of Latin America to Ruben Dario revealed the affection of the Spanish-speaking nations for the man whose transmutive and transmissive genius gave them their Spanish-American Renaissance.

A DISTINGUISHED Mexican columnist, Alfonso Junco, recently stated in El Universal that "in this grave hour facing the world the Spanish nations must activate their spiritual and material contacts; must consolidate their destiny." It was the voice of Ruben, says Jose Maria Peman, calling to Spain that gave her new life after the Spanish-American War of 1898. Peman says that Ruben's "Salutacion del Optimista" is the finest expression of Hispanism, "the only legitimate totalitarianism" wherein nation cooperates with human dignity and culture.

As a conscious movement, Hispanism is as old as Pan Americanism. Ruben Dario's "Azul," with which Spanish-American literary culture definitely begins, was published in 1888. But in race and culture Hispanism is as old as the Spanish nation. Pan Americanism, however, in Spanish America at least, seems to be the affair of governments. Its recognition and service rests largely with them. In Mexico, for example, Pan America Day this past April 14 had only formal observance under government auspices. Nevertheless, the celebration did seem more like a friendly gesture to the United States by the Mexican government than the usual official observance.

Another notable editorial in El Universal of April 16 frankly admits the politico-commercial character of Pan Americanism. It discerns a new note in the official America Day, quite different, it says, from that of continental brotherhood invoked from the beginning by optimistic officials of the Pan American Union as the base of Pan Americanism. The editorial states quite frankly that continental solidarity must rest upon realities; that it cannot be achieved through the servile, opportunistic acceptance of petty mestizo tyrants, but only by a confraternity of free democratic peoples demanding better standards and fairer treatment in inter-American political and economic relations.

TO THIS END political and commercial practices can easily be revamped. But culture cannot be remade; certainly not immediately, and maybe never. But it can become tolerant. Working, therefore, with mutual understanding from seemingly irreconcilable ends, Pan Americanism and Hispano-Americanism can become reconciled. It is, however, a reconciliation that will require more time and patience than the American people have the habit of recognizing as essential in the achievement of objectives that are distinctly cultural and not commercial.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Well, you're back on your throne, Lion of Judah, King of Kings, Emperor of Ethiopia . . .

You look a little bizarre and unreal, It's still a hot seat, Haile, and you might do well to fasten the safety belt . . .

But you are a symbol and a lesson.

It was in your case, Haile, that the great nations of the earth, among them the troubled democracies, made the shameful mistake that brought their world toppling about their ears.

It was through their cowardly, pussy-footing hypocrisies that they exposed themselves to the merciless destroyers of civilization as timid compromisers and as cautious Boy Scouts of Expediency.

Yet the first beat of the hobnailed boots was to be heard that day five years ago when you stood before the League of Nations asking for only the help that a brother might give to a brother beset by gangsters . . . the first drones of the Stukas were audible as, your black eyes flashing, you asked no more than that your fellow members keep a pledge.

Little did they know then, twirling their mustaches, fingering their watchfobs and impatiently yearning for their dinners (a table, please, by the window, overlooking the lake!) that the horrors to which they were committing you, oh Lion of Judah, would return to them a thousandfold.

Well, we broke our pledge, shed our sense of honor, drew our cloaks of hypocrisy more tightly about us, and gave the New Order the green light.

We gave the gangsters the picture they were looking for . . . we supplied our own character analysis . . . and you went out from that council chamber an exile, a preview of things to come, while your land was ravished by the invader, acting on the go ahead signal from your buddies!

The mills of the gods grind slowly . . .

The Miracle Of Britain

By Eugene Pharo

Menzies Hails Morale

"THE LATEST exploit of German civilization" in bombing Westminster Abbey, Westminster Hall, the British Museum, and the Houses of Parliament, yesterday led Robert G. Menzies, prime minister of Australia, to tell the world what he originally intended to speak about only in an "off the record" talk at the National Press Club.

It turned out to be a stirring description of British fortitude as he had witnessed it in several bombed towns, and in the midst of bombing, on his recent visit to England. And it carried with it the Englishman's deeply felt devotion to a long heritage of liberty.

At a guest table that held high officials of the State Department, ranking officers of the military services, and legislators, he told a crowded ballroom, "I am going to talk to you as one free man can talk to other freemen. I am going to ignore all the warnings that I have been given as to what not to say."

"And," he added, "I am not going to talk to you about your business, as that may be considered distinct from mine, but about our business—that of maintaining liberty in a very dark and stormy world."

REFERRING bitterly to the bombing of London's historic buildings, he said that Westminster Abbey "was the shrine of a people before Germany had ever been heard of, before the American settlement had been established, before Australia had been thought of. It is," he said, "a great shrine of liberty in a nation which has the supreme honor in this world of ours of being the mother of liberty.

"Germany," he bit out," seeks to strike down one of the shrines not only of the nation she's fighting, but of civilized nations all over the world." And Westminster Hall, he pointed out, is also the shrine of a common heritage with the United States, that of the English common law.

The prime minister explained the heroism of the plain people of England on the basis of the "tough and enduring sense of continuity" that is symbolized by such shrines and their history.

"A man with an historic sense of continuity," the Australian declared "is not to be bombed out of his inheritance by any uncivilized blackguards who come to invade him from the skies."

Menzies declared that the British are fighting the war with total absence of calculation. It is, he said, "no part-time business," and is being fought with complete use of all resources, because "we don't like the kind of world we would have to live in if this war were lost."

He emphasized the importance of the machine. "The man," he stated, "who is going to win or lose this war for our cause is the man who makes the stuff. It is the man in the factory without whom all the skill, resolution and bravery in the world can't win the war."

IN CONCLUDING his talk the Australian said that he would like to say what he thought about a remark "made by at least one man" (Lindbergh), that this is a "mere intra-European struggle."

Quoting the remark with satirical scorn at least four times, Menzies stated "this nonsense about an 'intra-European struggle' is of all nonsense the worst.

"I don't care a hoot about the internal politics of Europe," he stated, "but I do care about the liberty of this world and the liberty of the people I am proud to represent."

The Australian prime minister ended his talk with a quotation from the American Declaration of Independence.

"I ask," he said, "for no better motto for the British people in this struggle than that they have dedicated themselves and everything they have, to 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.'"

It was only at the end of his talk that Menzies mentioned what he had witnessed on his recent tour of England. And he spoke then only in response to a question from the audience.

"On one night in Plymouth when I was there," he answered, "They had a 'blitz.'

"It is a horrible spectacle and a horrible experience. It is not just a passing incident, but just about as terrifying an experience as any human being can go through. The miracle about it is how people can react from it in a few hours.

"I WENT THROUGH town after town, where not hundreds but thousands had been bombed, and thousands killed or wounded—and injury by bombing is not pleasant. With many who were killed individual burial was impractical. There were mass funerals, with hundreds buried in a common grave.

"And yet the next morning in the factories, thousands of workers would be there on time. The women, young and old, in widow's weeds and in new widow's weeds, would be smiling and cheerful. 'He's not going to beat us,' was all they had to say.

"I have walked through streets that were lined with fires, where buildings crashed, and where you had to walk a chalk line in the middle of the street to keep as clear as possible and where the situation was made worse by delayed bombs. And I have seen people being brought out of the ruins of their homes.

"And in a week's time you will see there nothing but smiling people. This is not because they are insensitive, it is because they know that they can 'grin and bear it' better than the enemy who is attacking them," he declared.

Fair Enough

Righting The Wagner Act

A VAST VOLUME of wordage has been produced in print and in Congress on the question of union organization, sometimes inaccurately described as labor's gains, and, in the excitement, most of us have lost sight of the fact that the subject dates back before the beginning of the war and is not confined to the problem of national defense. It is terribly true that professional unioneers, some of the common dollar crooks and many of them Muscovite traitors, have impeded the war program, and we know that the damage done in this field has been minimized and misrepresented lest the whole people of the country lose patience with the Administration for shielding these saboteurs.

PEGLER

WE KNOW that to say that so-and-so many man-hours have been lost may be to conceal the extent of the damage, because if the man-hours are lost in a key operation they will later cause a pile-up in other operations and that the man-hours lost then will multiply by ten. These protestations are so plainly political and so transparently false that they shake faith, because a government which asks the people to go all-out for defense or war is not honest with the whole people when it excuses and minimizes wrongs by the agents of a special element. President Roosevelt is supposed to be President of and for the whole United States, not merely President of the United States for the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., and, in this emergency, the labor unions have no more right to block preparations for defense or war than Bethlehem Steel.

But the wrong existed before the war, the wrong is written into the Wagner Act, which some emotionalist called labor's Magna Charta, and it would still exist even if the Wagner Act were totally repealed. The fundamental wrong lies in the compulsion to join a union which was exercised with wagon spoke and half-brick, with gun and the terroristic phone call in the night, long before the Wagner Act was passed. No private organization should be permitted to compel American citizens to join its ranks, even though it be a perfectly democratic and honest union, as few of them are.

BEFORE the Wagner Act, however, that compulsion was informal and illegal. It rarely was invoked or redressed but, nevertheless, it was illegal according to the laws on the books, but the Wagner Act legalized it, the labor board, salted with Communists and compulsioneers of less fort-right mien, has helped enforce the compulsion, and the Supreme Court, under its de facto Chief Justice, Felix Frankfurter, has given this compulsion amounting to an amplifying law.

So we find, and must accept as a fact of life in the republic, daily infringing the rights of people who think that they are free, a legal requirement that American citizens, under certain conditions, must join private organizations as a condition of their right to earn a living. Wrong though it be, that is the law of the land today.

BUT WE ALSO find that these private organizations are subject to none of the supervision and restraint that govern other private groups. Only the religious bodies enjoy equal immunities, but the people are not compelled to join any church. However, a religious man can be compelled to join an organization whose objectives include the abolition of religion and to contribute of his earnings for that purpose. The Wagner Act does not provide for scrutiny of the constitutions of unions by any Government agency and the constitutions of the musicians, one of the biggest in the Nation, permits the president to suspend the entire document and rule entirely by ear at any time. He can substitute other provisions at will, and he would today insert a provision in favor of atheism and still every Protestant, Catholic and Jew among the thousands who constitute a great portion of the membership would face the economic death penalty in disassociating himself from an organization hostile to their faith.

THE FACT makes no provisions for honest election, for the regulation and the honest expenditure of dues, taxes and assessments or for admission to unions by qualified workers in a case where the union constitutes a job monopoly. It forbids coercion and oppression of employees by employers, but pointedly and intentionally fails to protect nonunion workers from atrocities by union agents, even though it is well known that the official lists of the union are badly infested with criminals and Communists, the latter schooled in the methods of the G. P. U.

These are not all the wrongs against free men which the American Government mulishly refuses even to discuss, much less admit to redress, at a time when all the people are called upon and most of them fervently desire to be united in an all-out effort to arm for defense or war. They are the more dramatic and tragic in time of peril, but they would be fundanmentally wrong at any time. And come peace or war, Americans will not be free until the Wagner Act is repudiated down to its original core, which consists only of the right of men to bargain collectively through agents of their own choice.

Railroads Plan 270,000 More Freight Cars

Chicago, May 12 (AP).—Members of the Association of American Railroads accepted today a recommendation by their officials for a net increase of 270,000 freight cars at an approximate cost of $730,000,000 for the two years from October, 1941, to October, 1943.

This would be a net increase of 16 per cent in freight rolling stock. The estimates were worked out jointly by association experts and officials of the Office of Production Management.

Forty railroad presidents and representatives of 34 other roads also attacked the problem of apportioning the additional cars among the carriers.

Ralph Budd, transportation member of the National Defense Advisory Commission and president of the Burlington Railroad, said materials needed for transportation would be given prime consideration by the Government.

The members agreed that in order to facilitate mass production of new cars, present designs would be "frozen" and no new ones would be introduced.

Hess and Hitler—Hitler's Deputy Party Leader Hess (right) sits with Der Fuehrer (center) and Ullrich Graf in the Buergerbrau House at an anniversary celebration of the beer hall putsch"

On the Western Front—Deputy Fuehrer Hess is shown in the spring of 1940 as he reviewed German soldiers (top) and visited the advanced lines on the Western Front. German soldier (below) leads him through a trench. Hess was taken prisoner of war in Scotland after parachuting from a warplane in which he flew from Germany in defiance of Hitler personal command

Hess Perfected Nazi Party Organization

Rudolf Hess, who flew from Germany in defiance of Hitler's orders and was captured in Scotland, was often called Adolf Hitler's "shadow."

He was one of the most powerful political figures in Germany. When war broke out in Europe in 1939, the Fuehrer dramatically announced that in the event of his death he had arranged for his successor—first, Hermann Wilhelm Goering and second, Hess. Respectively, they were known popularly as the "No. 2" and "No. 3" Nazis.

Goering, a World War idol, and master of many jobs, was more popular with the people; Hess, although recognized as Hitler's alter ego, was more of a "behind-the-scenes" personage.

But the tall, dark-eyed, shaggy-browed Hess unquestionably exerted a powerful influence over Hitler. They were inseparable companions. Whenever the German leader appeared in public, Hess could always be seen in the background.

As Hitler's personal deputy—a minister without portfolio—Hess carried out his master's orders, promptly, efficiently and thoroughly. Ruthlessly, he brushed aside all opposition. He was a man to be feared. When there were protest over Nazi policies he gagged them. He sternly announced that any one insulting a Storm Trooper would be punished.

Hitler entrusted to him the job of house-cleaning and perfecting organization of the Nazi party. He did his task so well that on December 1, 1933, Hitler accredited him officially as his personal representative in all party matters. On July 27, 1934, he conferred upon him the right to collaborate in the framing of all laws drafted by all departments of the Reich. Later, as a member of Hitler's secret cabinet, he was one of the little group charged with broad powers to rule in war days.

Born on April 26, 1894, at Alexandria, Egypt, he was christened Walter Richard Rudolf Hess, but was always known as Rudolf. His father was a German import merchant at Alexandria. After attending school there, he studied in Switzerland and at Godesburg on the Rhine. He specialized in economics. He had prepared to take over his father's business when the World War interrupted his plans.

Enlisting as a volunteer in the Bavarian Field Infantry, he saw heavy fighting, especially near Verdun. He was wounded three times. Once he was shot in the lungs. On a battlefield in France he first met Hitler, the corporal.

Hitler and Hess were side by side in the abortive beer-cellar putsch at Munich in 1923. Both were obliged to flee the country. Both were captured and occupied nearby cells in Landsberg fortress. Hess served seven and one-half months.

He was one of the first members of the National Socialist Democratic Party and was among the first to become a member of the Storm Troops. The year 1925 found him as Hitler's private secretary; later, he became his adjutant.

Hess and Hitler were together in the beer hall at Munich in 1939 when an attempt was made to assassinate the leader by explosion of a time bomb. But both had left the hall ahead of scheduled time and thus escaped.

He neither drank nor smoked. He was married in Munich, July 20, 1927, to Ilse, daughter of Dr. Fritz Proehl, of the medical corps of the German army and a son was born on Armistice Day, November 11, 1937.

Bill Cunningham's Column

Thank Col. Frank Lowe For Reserve Officers

By Bill Cunningham

Rangeley, Me.—Through the cathedral stillness of the dusk on that darkly purple water, the burly salmon struck, and he must have brought it up from the floor, for there was something about the collision reminiscent of the Twentieth Century Limited smacking a hay rick at some rural grade crossing. He came out shaking his head like a hornet-stung buffalo and then swung in one of those wide curving runs that had the reel singing like a tenor bandsaw tearing at a hard pine knot.

I could almost hear Frank's excited voice at my elbow—barrages never moved him apparently, but salmon really got him—saying, "Keep your tip high! Hold a tight line! Let him play your rod! Steady now! Easy! Better reel a little, but watch him when he runs!"

But there was no Frank there.

I wished there had been. This was just a sort of solo rite. Maybe you don't know how a guy can miss his fishing companion. I know I didn't before.

Enough Reserve Officers

Just maybe this nation ought to know about Frank Lowe. Maybe some day it might want to thank him. Maybe when some Master Scorer gets around to summing up the hits and errors of this whole general time, his State and this entire great but uneasy land will be amazed to learn that this quiet citizen of a far Down-East seacoast town had about as much to do with having us as ready as we are, as anybody or anything else in it.

If you remember the last war, we had neither soldiers nor officers when we started, and, the latter, you'll agree, are pretty important. We did the best we could, and it was pretty swell, with those Citizens' Training Camps—Plattsburg, and the rest. But, after all they were brokers and businessmen suddenly trying to play soldier. They did their noble best, and this is no effort to discredit them nor to minimize their patriotic contributions. But some of those 10 weeks' shavetails . . . remember them, soldier?

It's all different this time.

Do you notice we haven't had, and aren't having, any Plattsburgs? Did you know we have enough trained and qualified officers to staff an active army of two million and a half? They're ready and waiting and there's more of them coming.

This is because our Reserve Officers' Corps was, and is, in such splendid condition, and, for my well worn money, the man most responsible for it all is the same State o' Mainer, Frank Lowe.

The last war knew him as a private who went on to become an overseas major in field artillery. His home State knew him later as the dignified head of a wharf and coal company, a department commander of the American Legion, and finally as a sort of secretary, or some such, of his State Industries Commission. Strangely enough nobody in his immediate parts seemed to know much about him as president of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States—a president who practically reorganized it, tightened it, expanded it, and who was called by it to succeed himself as president—a notable honor and a tribute to his exceptional service.

Keeping the Sportsman's Faith

While the conscription bill was still in its formative state, Citizen Frank E. Lowe, quietly, almost secretly, even, became Col. Frank E. Lowe, F. A., U. S. A., on active duty in the office of the chief of staff in Washington. His job was the assignment, the replacement, and the further training of those reserve officers who were now real officers. He knew 'em. After a manner of saying, the officers of this army, possibly the junior officers, if anybody wants to split hairs, were his contribution to his country, and few people ever made a finer one.

The other day a dispatch from Washington said in a few terse lines that Col. Frank E. Lowe of the United States Army was now reported in London on a special mission for this country. Only that and nothing more. It's the first spring in many that we haven't drowned a flock of flies in Maine waters together.

"She's a big 'un," said Joe, the guide, as he almost upset the canoe swinging the net under the thrashing silver beauty. And she was.

"Well, handle him gently and let him go," said I.

"You don't want him?" said he, so incredulously that he subconsciously switched the sex of the streamlined battler.

"No," said I.

That was a trick the colonel taught me. Nobody but a butcher, he used to say, ever fishes for meat, or ever killed a salmon just to show it around. I think he'd have been proud of the way I handled that fish, for, after all, I was his pupil. And I felt the least I could do was to keep the sportsman's faith with him.

A tight line to him wherever he is, and may such a salmon or a better one boil the lake's dark waters for him—and me, and even you—again in kindlier times when nothing else is more important.

COL. FRANK E. LOWE

"Barrages never moved him apparently, but salmon really got him . . ."

D.C. Circles Feel Hess' Flight Offset What Prestige Nazis Gained in Balkans

Some Think He Fled a Revolt's Consequences

Copyright by New York Times

News that Rudolf Hess, No. 3 Nazi to whom Adolf Hitler referred persistently in his writing as "My Admiral Rudolf," had stolen a plane and landed by parachute in Britain was felt in diplomatic circles of Washington to have struck a heavy blow at Nazi prestige, capable of more than offsetting the results of the successful blitzkrieg in the Balkans.

The news came like a bombshell here in both official and unofficial quarters.

Some in diplomatic circles thought it possible that discord was rife in the inner circles of the Nazi Party and that Hess had fled to avert the consequences of an abortive revolt. There have been reports of trouble within the German army, although these had seemed more indicative than important.

In Position to Know Truth

Others believed that Hess had thrown himself on the mercy of the British before it was too late, believing an eventual German victory over Britain to be impossible. Hess, it was pointed out, was in a much better position to know the real truth about Germany's economic and social weaknesses than most Germans, even those in high army posts.

There was little disposition here to credit the Nazy Party announcement that "Party Fellow Member Hess was a victim of hallucinations." Although it was felt that the German government might make public a purported departure note by Hess later, it was regarded as significant that this was not released at once if it were available.

"A Certain Lack of Humor"

The statement that he was suffering from hallucinations, according to one diplomat, "showed a certain lack of humor on the part of the Germans."

What was regarded as certain was that peoples and governments in many parts of the world would conclude that something was wrong in what had appeared to many as Hitler's impregnable Reich and that explanations would be regarded with suspicion, particularly if they emanated from the Nazi propaganda machine. It was thought likely, that countries frightened into flirting with Germany would draw back, at least for the time being.

No official comment was available here as such.

Hess Made Flight From Home Town Of Messerschmitt

Copyright by New York Times

New York, May 12.—In fleeing from Germany in a Messerschmitt 110 by way of Augsburg, 40 miles southwest of Munich, in Bavaria, Rudolf Hess, Deputy Fuehrer of the Nazi Party, made his escape from the home town of Dr. Willy Messerschmitt, noted German airplane designer and manufacturer and one of the 24 "military economy leaders" of the aviation industry responsible to Hitler alone.

Before the war the center of Messerschmitt operations was in Augsburg, and Dr. Messerschmitt's continued residence there indicates it is still the headquarters of his company. Reichsmarshal Goering last February made a tour of Messerschmitt factories in "southern Germany."

The facts given in the Berlin and London announcement indicate that either Herr Hess did not start with full fuel tanks or he was not able to proceed directly to his objective. The Messerschmitt 110, a twin-engined fighting plane carrying five machine guns and two cannons, carries fuel enough for a little more than three hours in the air. Its top speed is between 350 and 400 miles an hour, although the single-engined 109, apparently stripped, set a record of 470 miles an hour.

Since the distance between Augsburg and Glasgow is 825 miles, and Hess is reported to have landed with empty fuel tanks, he either covered from 200 to 400 miles more or left with partially empty tanks.

Ex-Sister-in-Law Of Hess Hopes They've Got Him

Bristol, Va., May 12 (AP).—A Bristol woman, once married to a brother of Rudolf Hess, commented tonight, "I hope they have got him," when informed that the British had the Nazi Party leader as a hostage of war.

Mrs. E. L. Upchurch, then Bessie Emma Richard, was married to Hess' brother, Gustav Adolf Hess, in Bristol May 3, 1907, where he was employed by a lumber company. He died April 26, 1920. Their son, Gustav Adolf Hess, is with the Seventy-seventh Battery Anti-aircraft at Fort Randolph, Canal Zone.

Mrs. Upchurch said that she has not heard from any member of the Hess family in Germany since 1920. She told a newspaperman that she had never seen the man who rose to power under Adolf Hitler.

Hess Finally Said 'No' to His Fuehrer, London Believes

London (Tuesday), May 13 (AP).—The British were saying today that Rudolf Hess finally got around to saying "no" to Adolph Hitler.

Englishmen who lived in Berlin before the war recalled that the German party leader and his doll-like wife, Ilse, were held up to other Germans as the ideal Aryan couple.

Because of the couple's loyalty to Hitler these Englishmen said a familiar bit of satire in foregn circles in Berlin used to be:

"The Hesses? Oh, you mean the Yessers."

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, May 12.—The strange flight of Rudolf Hess from Germany to Scotland has a fictional counterpart in a book published only nine months ago—a book relating what happened to Adolf Hitler when he supposedly dropped in on England by parachute in March, 1940.

That tale, only a little more fantastic than the true story of Hess, was told by Peter Fleming, young English author and explorer, in "The Flying Visit."

As Fleming related it, the Fuehrer's "danger-hunger," plus his curiosity as to the country he was going to conquer, led him to arrange to fly over England at night. His plane exploded in mid-air. He descended alone in a parachute to the edge of a shallow horse-pond "somewhere near Oxford."

Hitler decided to make his way to some important person and to announce he had come over to arrange for a peace treaty. He knocked at a cottage door and encountered a Mrs. Trumball, who slammed the door in his face under the impression he was distributing pamphlets about air raids. Discouraged, Hitler tried to kill himself, only to find some thoughtful friend had loaded his gun with blanks.

After many troubles, Hitler makes his way to a party in the village. There, to his delight, those present shout and scream for joy, give the Nazi salute and vociferously "Heil Hitler."

They give him a pound of butter, slap him on the back, urge him to make a speech and receive it with ecstatic frenzy. Only too late does he realize that he has won the first prize in a fancy dress contest. The louder he screams his identity, the louder people laugh.

Winston Churchill imprisons Hitler and breaks the news to his cabinet. The British calm is disturbed briefly when an American newspaperman cables his paper that Hitler is in England. As the Fuehrer's double has been talking over the radio all the time, nobody believes the newspaperman.

Finally, someone suggests that the real Hitler be sent back where he came from. He is fortified with a swig of brandy. Then he is flown over eastern Germany and, with a nice stick of nut chocolate in his hand, is dropped by parachute into a shallow bog. The story compares Hitler to "a child sent home with a present from a Christmas party," but does not relate what happened afterward.

Club Is Collecting Soap for Britain At Wilson School

A campaign to collect soap bars for the people of Britain will be conducted among the 1,700 students of Woodrow Wilson High School, Charles Loucks, president of the Social Studies Club at the school, announced yesterday.

Each bar of soap collected will be placed in an overcoat, earmarked for England by the Bundles for Britain organization. The Social Studies Club expects to mobilize the entire student body for the soap campaign.

Woman Jewel Thief Sentenced

New York, May 12 (INS).—Dorothy Stirrat, known to jewel thieves as "Mme Ladyfinger," was sentened to from 10 to 30 years in prison today she was convicted of complicity in the $75,000 jewel robbery of Mrs. James V. Forrestal, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who was followed from a night club to her home and robbed four years ago.

The prisoner won her name of Mme. Ladyfinger because her job with a jewel thief gang was to spot women wearing valuable jewels in public places and point them out or "put the finger on them" to her accomplices.

Army Shows How Not to Destroy Bridge; Peace an Obstacle

How not to destroy a bridge was noisily demonstrated yesterday by Company D, Fifth Engineers, Fort Belvoir, on an abandoned stretch of old Highway No. 1 after overcoming a number of difficulties associated only with peace.

In the first place it was carefully pointed out by Lieut. F. J. Wells, commanding, a bridge destroyed to impede an enemy would be so thoroughly wrecked he could use no part of it to make repairs. But this bridge had to be replaced in usable condition, so the abutments were to be left on which to construct another bridge. Therefore, the bridge would be blown out in a manner which would not be acceptable in wartime as an example of what not to do.

Company D itself, which bivouacked in the vicinity last night, will build a timber bridge today on the old abutments, demonstrating that engineers are people of numerous attainments.

Double as Infantry

Arriving at the bridge, a concrete slab span 33 feet wide and 21 feet long over a nameless little streamlet just south of Stafford Courthouse, the company immediately began simulating combat conditions. A platoon of engineers doubling as infantry with two machine guns, was thrown out as a security detachment along the crest of a low chain of hills facing the hypothetical enemy. A portable air compressor was backed onto the bridge and air drills began probing for steel beams. A few minutes of this determined that the 15-inch floor of the bridge was reinforced only by 1-inch steel rods and the drills were put aside for air-driven spades.

With two of these at work on the asphalt and macadam surface of the roadway, eight trenches quickly were bitten down to the concrete. Meanwhile other elements of the company were busy. One crew unloadd 350 pounds of TNT in half-pound blocks and 100 sticks of dynamite from a truck and packed them in burlap bags.

Peacetime Obstacle

Trenches finished, they were packed with the sacks of TNT and dynamite and sandbags piled over them. This job was all but done when a second peacetime obstacle arrived in the person of W. B. Bates, resident engineer for the Virginia Highway Department, who demanded to know how come this particular bridge was being destroyed. An earnest conference followed, after which Lieut. Wells got in Bates' automobile and went off to straighten the matter out, while guards were posted over the dangerously laden bridge and the men were sent to lunch.

Matters were soon settled to Bates' satisfaction and the nervous business of blowing out the bridge began. When it happened, after a couple of false starts due to imperfect electrical connections, it was terrific.

With a blast that shook you to your marrow and stripped adjacent trees of all their leaves, a great black out of asphalt, mud, sandbags, smoke and the debris of forgotten picnics roared into the air. When it fell back, peppering the road and the trees 100 yards away with a shrapnel shower of earth and rock, all of Company D who could find space there were under all available trucks.

According to Plan

There wasn't any more bridge. With the exception of a narrow strip, where 50 or 60 pounds of TNT failed to fire, the great slab of concrete lay among a twisted tangle of reinforcing rods in the bed of the little stream. The heavy concrete guard rails were gone; only the abutments stood, cracked but serviceable, just as intended.

After a few repairs, the remaining strip of roadway was blasted into the stream, a crumbled and smoking remnant of a bridge that once carried traffic south from Washington.

Flight-Route Hess May Have Taken

HESS' FLIGHT—Rudolf Hess, Nazi No. 3, might have taken this direct route in his flight from Augsburg in southern Germany to Glasgow, Scotland, where he was captured by the British after he parachuted to earth were very fond of it. He asked for a glass of water.

"We sent word to the authorities and in the meantime he chatted freely to us and showed us pictures of his little boy, of whom he spoke very proudly.

English Very Clear

"He told us he had left ermany about four hours before and had landed because nightfall was approaching. I could see from the way he spoke that he was a man of culture. His English, although it had a foreign accent, was very clear and he understood every word we said to him.

"He was a very striking looking man, wearing a magnificent flying suit. His watch and identity bracelet were of gold.

"He wouldn't discuss his journey. He was most gentlemanly in his attitude to my mother and sister and thanked us for what we had done for him. He was most anxious about the parachute, which he said he'd like to keep because it saved his life. He wouldn't tell us who he was, and we thought he was just another German airman.

"When the officials came he greeted them with a smile and assured them he was unarmed and stood up and allowed them to search him. Then he was taken away."

Later McLean was shown a picture of Hess and said:

Rep. Jones Calls For Investigation Of Corcoran Talk

By the Associated Press

Representative Jones (Republican), of Ohio, demanded in the House yesterday an investigation of the current activities of Thomas Corcoran, former Administration aide.

Jones called attention to testimony by Secretary Ickes before the House Appropriations Committee, that Corcoran had discussed with him the question of a Government loan for a private oil prospecting venture in Alaska.

Asserting that the promoter was a client of Corcoran's and that an unspecified newspaper article "says Corcoran brags of making millions," Jones demanded:

"Let us get his modus operandi. Let us see if we can stop the insidious movements of Tommy the Cork in the temple. Let us stop this funnelling of millions of dollars by Tommy hte Cork of the toil and tears of our people."

Sen. Burton's Wife Posts Bond on Speed Charge

Special Dispatch to The Post

Boonsboro, Md., May 12.—Mrs. Salma Burton, wife of United States Senator Harold H. Burton, of Ohio, posted $11.45 before Magistrate E. G. Miller here yesterday on a charge of exceeding 50 miles an hour. She will appear later this week for a hearing. State officer R. F. Lewis said he trailed the car from near Hagerstown to Boonsboro.

disorder which led to fear that Party Fellow Member Hess was a victim of hallucinations," the party statement added.

The complete announcement said:

"Party Fellow Member Hess, who, because of his failing health, for years has been strictly forbidden by the Fuehrer to be active in aviation, was able, contrary to these instructions, to acquire an airplane again recently.

On Saturday, May 10, about 6 p. m., Party Fellow Member Hess started on a flight at Augsburg, from which he has not returned to this day.

"Victim of Hallucinations"

"A letter left behind unfortunately shows in its confusion the traces of mental disorder which led to fears that Party Fellow Member Hess was a victim of hallucinations.

"The Fuehrer immediately ordered the arrest of the adjutants of Party Fellow Member Hess, who alone knew about those flights, and did not hinder them and did not report them in spite of the instructions known by them to have been given by the Fuehrer.

"Under those circumstances the National Socialist movement unfortunately must assume that the Party Fellow Member Hess has crashed somewhere on his flight or had another accident."

Tall, dark, bushy-browed and somber, the 47-year-old Hess was one of the most powerful figures in the Nazi regime, both publicly and behind the scenes.

[Hess last was seen in public a week ago Sunday at the session of the Reichstag addressed by Hitler, the United Press said. All during the speech he sat with arms folded and a poker face in the chair next to Hitler's.

[The last public speech of the Deputy Fuehrer was at Augsburg on May 1, at the Messerschmitt Aviation Works, where he praised the workers and handed out certificates of honor to a number of industrial leaders.

[A newsreel depicting this ceremony is being shown now in theaters throughout Germany.]

Since the World War he had been an intimate of Adolf Hitler, whom he met on the battlefields of France.

Strong in Inner Circle

A few months after the Nazi Party came into power in Germany he was made Hitler's deputy in all party affairs.

On September 1, 1939, the day Hitler donned the field uniform of the German army to announce to the Reichstag his invasion of Poland, Hess was named after Goering as the No. 2 choice to carry on national socialism should anything happen to the Fuehrer.

By many observers he was regarded as the probable actual successor of Hitler because of his strong position in the party and the inner Nazi circle.

His influence over Hitler was reputed to be strong. It was to him that Hitler dedicated "Mein Kampf," the handbook of Nazism, which was written while both were prisoners in Landsberg Fortress for their part in the bloody and unsuccessful Munich Beer Hall putsch of 1923.

He was one of the first members of Hitler's Storm Troops, and soon was the Fuehrer's private secretary. As such he often made appearances for Hitler when the latter could not personally attend.

In the stormy period of the expansion of the party he always was at Hitler's side. To him were entrusted the ruthless measures of a party housecleaning when inner dissensions threatened before the party finally rose to power.

Again, during the blood purge of 1934, he stood by Hitler, though some of his close friends were among the purged.

He saw to it that drastic measures against the Jews were carried out.

Later he took a prominent role in formation of the Rome-Berlin Axis, going to the border to meet Premier Mussolini and escorting him to Munich where the understanding was being reached.

When the war came he was made a member of the secret war cabinet.

Hess was born April 26, 1894, at Alexandria, Egypt, and thus had a large interest in Germany's plans in the Near East and Mediterranean. He was the son of a German importer.

He went to school in Switzerland and Godesberg, specializing in economics, but when the World War broke out he joined the Bavarian infantry and saw heavy action, particularly at Verdun. He was wounded three times in the war, and a fourth time during Germany's bitter internal strife of postwar years.

He escaped assassination on November 8, 1939, by but a few minutes when a bomb exploded in a Munich's burgerbrau cellar just after Hitler had finished addressing a meeting of Nazi stalwarts celebrating the 1923 putsch.

He was known for his temperate habits, and neither drank nor smoked.

In 1927 he married the daughter of a German army doctor, by whom he had one son, born November 11, 1937.

Brewsters Found Dead in Wreckage Of Their Plane

Lewistown, Pa., Mary 12 (AP).—Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Brewster, New York socialites, missing four days on a cross-country pleasure flight, were found dead tonight in the charred wreckage of their airplane atop a central Pennsylvania mountain.

The bodies were identified by Whitney Stone, a brother-in-law of Brewster, who accompanied searching parties to the tip of Shade Mountain, 25 miles south of here, soon after the wreckage was sighted by an airmail pilot.

State police said the ship had struck the top of the 1,500-foot mountain, plowing up nearly 100 feet of ground, snapping off tree tops and finally bursting into flames.

Hess Saw Writing on Wall, Viscount Halifax Suggests

By the Associated Press

Kansas City, May 12.—Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, told an audience tonight that "perhaps Herr Hess acted as he did because he saw the writing on the wall."

The Ambassador brought chuckles from his listeners several times as he deviated from his prepared address to comment on the impromptu parachute landing of Rudolf Hess in Scotland.

"Herr Hess has landed in Scotland by parachute from a German Messerschmitt and tonight is safe in a Glasgow hospital," he said.

"Here is an important man, by Hitler's own choice the No. 2 man after Goering to succeed him as Fuehrer.

"None of us knows why.

"Perhaps it was because of madness before he left Germany. If so he is not the only one so in Germany.

"Perhaps Herr Hess acted as he did because he saw the handwriting on the wall."

Hess, Fleeing Naziism, Showed Regained Sanity, Briton Says

By the Associated Press

New York, May 12.—Instead of being insane, as the Nazis said, Rudolf Hess "suddenly became sane" when he flew to Britain, a British Broadcasting Co. commentator declared tonight.

In an extended commentary on Hess' getaway, picked up in New York by C. B. S., the British commentator, called "the Man in the Street," said this, in part:

"The news that Hess, officially the third man in Nazi Germany, has landed in Scotland is sensational enough. It never was possible to believe the official story that, although unfit for flying and forbidden to do so by the good, kind Fuehrer, he had got hold of a plane when no one was looking and then met with a fatal accident.

"For one thing, Hess was a fine pilot and there had been no suggestion until today that he was suffering from a 'long standing disease'—except the disease known as nazism.

"There was no trace of grief or regret in the announcement of his disappearance. Indeed, the whole communique was callous and hostile. And that reference to his mental confusion, his hallucinations revealed in the letter he left—mental confusion and hallucinations are always attributed by the Nazis to those who disagree with them.

Suddenly Saw Truth

"No, it looks to me as if Hess, so far from becoming a victim of hallucinations and mental confusion, may have suddenly begun to think straight and to get rid of the hallucinations that made him see Hitler as the fuehrer destined to conquer the world.

"It looks as if Hess suddenly saw the truth, perhaps, after living for years in a dream. He may all at once have realized that the whole Nazi system was a monster sham, and that Hitler was leading the German people to catastrophe . . .

"It looks as if Hess suddenly became sane, perhaps, and saw the truth. And it meant one thing—to Hess—death unless he could escape.

"Well, one German who suddenly sees the truth has escaped. One day, millions of Germans will see the truth. It won't be possible for them to escape, except in one way.

"So let us look to the day when the German nation comes to share Hess' 'hallucinations.'

"Someone else then will have to flee for his life—if he can."

More Sane Than Crazy, Says Dr. Overholser

One of the country's leading psychiatrists declared here yesterday that Rudolf Hess was probably "much more sane than crazy."

Dr. Winfred Overholser, head of St. Elizabeths Hospital, said that while it was possible that Hess "got the jitters and thought the world was coming to an end" he probably did a cool, sane job of calculation and estimated that his chances were better in being interned in England than they were in staying in Germany.

Even if the man were insane he still could pilot an airplane, the psychiatrist said, "but it is much more reasonable to think that he was in full possession of his faculties and merely wished to escape" from some situation that he considered no longer tenable for him.

Such an escape by a man who had been discouraged from flying by Hitler himself would indicate calm deliberation and planning well in advance which a man with a very unbalanced mind would be hardly capable of carrying out, Dr. Overholser said.

British Statement on Hess

The text of the official announcement issued at 11:20 p. m. said:

"Rudolf Hess, the deputy fuehrer of Germany and party leader of the National Socialist Party, has landed in Scotland in the following circumstances:

"On the night of Saturday, the 10th, a Messerschmitt 110 was reported by our patrol to have crossed the coast of Scotland and to be flying in the direction of Glasgow.

"Since the Messerschmitt 110 would not have fuel to return to Germany this report was at first disbelieved.

"Later on a Messerschmitt 110 crashed near Glasgow with its guns loaded. Shortly afterwards a German officer who had bailed out was found with his parachute in the neighborhood suffering from a broken ankle.

"He was taken to a hospital in Glasgow, where he at first gave his name as Horn but later on he declared that he was Rudolf Hess.

"He brought with him various photographs of himself at different ages, apparently in order to establish his identity.

"These photographs were deemed to be photographs of Hess by several people who knew him personally. Accordingly an officer of the foreign office who was closely acquainted with him before the war has been sent by airplane to see him in the hospital."

Talent Wanted To Amuse Army

for final victory on a crack-up in Germany.

The more realistic people believed that crack-up would not come until Germany had been hit so hard that the Reich would crack under the force of the blow. One of the problems the British are going to have to face is to choke off those people who will interpret this dime novel development as indicating that Germany is cracking.

Of course these people may be right. But the British—at least their leaders know they must not make any such assumption. From the British point of view, it is still a long hard war. It is not likely that Prime Minister Churchill or anybody else will succumb too early to a facile interpretation of this development.

This war was once called "phoney." The writer can hardly believe the story he has just written. The amazing thing is that so far as all reliable authorities are concerned, it is true. But if the adjective "phoney" was misapplied in the early days of this war, the adjective fantastic is applicable now.

Lands on Hamilton Estate

London, May 12 (U.P.).—Rudolf Hess floated down from his plane onto the estate of the Duke of Hamilton, first peer of Scotland.

Some sources said Hess must have known where he was landing, quoting him as asking when he was picked up to be taken to the Duke of Hamilton. The master of the estate, incidentally, formerly was the Marquess of Clydesdale, the so-called boxing peer who flew over Mount Everest in 1933.

So far as was known, the duke had not been connected in any way with any peace movements. A fact not tallying with the expressed theory that Hess brought terms to end the war.

London Suspects Purge

London, May 12.—While admitting the "slight possibility" that Rudolf Hess was a victim of a mental disorder, informed quarters here were inclined to feel that Hess, having seen the handwriting on the wall, simply had fled Germany to escape another blood purge by Hitler such as that of 1934.

It was recalled that Ernest Roehm, one of the victims of that "day of the long knives" had been called insane also by the Nazi rulers. Such a purge might be forthcoming as a truly Hitlerian gesture to explain his failure to "beat Britain this year," as the Fuehrer had promised his people many times and which, in his recent Reichstag speech, he indicated was not going to happen, it was felt here.

Toll on U-Boats Reported at 70%

London, May 12 (AP).—Brassey's Naval Annual, a British publication, appeared today with an estimate that more than 70 per cent of the German submarines commissioned in the past 12 months have been sunk.

Commander Harry Pursey, retired naval officer, wrote: "This rate, which should be possible of improvement, is probably greater than that of German replacement . . . and certainly greater than the supply of efficient crews available."

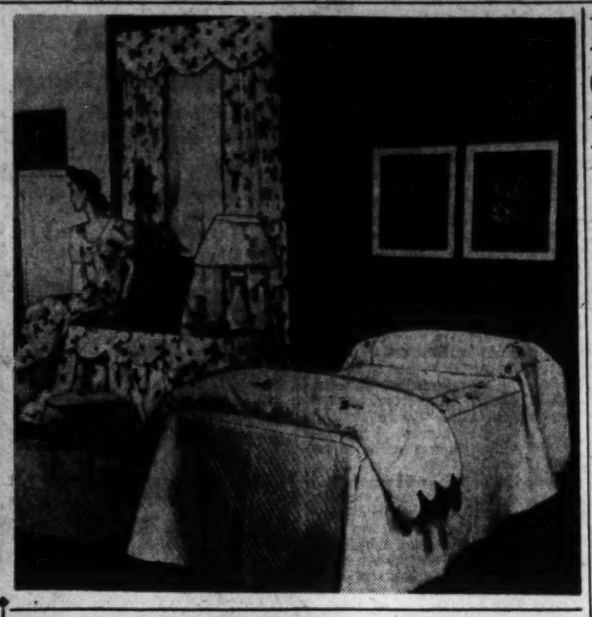
Cotton Gains Prestige in Dress and Furnishings

Below—Betty Wickard is showing as keen interest in the flowered cotton evening dress as her father, the Secretary of Agriculture, does in cotton production and consumption. The dress is one in the exhibit at the Cotton House, Department of Agriculture, made by the Bureau of Home Economics, as an example of how to be smartly dressed in cotton.

Right—The nights won't seem so hot with your bedroom "cooled off" in cotton accessories as shown above. The white bedspread, quilt, and stool are attractively appliqued with red strawberries. This motif is also used in dressing table skirt and matching curtains. The frilly lamp shade and chenille throw rug are also cotton products



Cotton Role in Defense Important Also Finds New Uses in Home

By Martha Ellyn
Post Household Editor

SO MANIFOLD are the uses of cotton that throughout our houses we are surrounded with articles made from its soft, fleecy fibers.

Martha Ellyn,

We are awakened in the morning by sunlight shining through cotton window curtains and shades. And we may have slept on a cotton-filled mattress and on cotton sheets and pillow slips with a cotton blanket to keep us warm.

We take a bath and use a cotton bath towel, step onto a fluffy cotton bath mat, arrange the hair with a brush and comb made with celluloid backing, eat breakfast on a cotton tablecloth and then ride away to business in a car equipped with tires whose fabrics are made of cotton. National Cotton Week, beginning Friday, will call attention to these and other ways that this product influences our lives.

Yith nationtl defense activities getting under way, cotton has become even more important in American life. The defense program had a tremendous influence in the United States cotton manufacturing industry in 1940, because of Army purchases of certain cotton textiles, of which there was a scarcity or at least a potential scarcity.

Some Army Needs

A fair idea of the extent of Uncle Sam's purchases of items made of cotton can be gained from a few of the items of wearing apparel purchased by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army between June 30 and December 1, 1940. Here are a few statistics:

Handkerchiefs	5,005,000
Shirts	926,000
Socks (pairs)	14,000,000
Undershirts	4,200,000
Trousers, khaki and denim	4,100,000

With thousands of moles of new concrete roads being built, new airport runways under construction and millions of yards of new concrete being used in expanding Army training camps, cotton is playing a vital role in the Bureau of Public Roads in the interest of National Defense. This bureau has been testing all-cotton concrete curing mats as the newest and most efficient method of watercure for new concrete. These mats have proved successful and already are exclusively recommended for use in several States.

Many Uses Listed

In clothing manufacture, more cotton is used than wool, silk and linen put together. Millions of bales of cotton go into the manufacture of household items too. Included among the items made from cotton fibers, cottonseeds and cotton linters are the following: lamp shades, book binding, backing for oilcloth and linoleum, phonographic records, celluloid for brushes and combs, dolls, beads, oil for salad oil, cosmetics, soap, putty, tar, roofing, twinefi thread, rope, wire insulation, clotheslines, flags and bunting, and oil mops.

Cotton possesses a versatility unapproached by any other agricultural product for it has virtually no limitation of function. We wear cotton and use it in countless ways in the home; we use it in the office and in the workshop; we use it in the agricultural fields; we use it in recreation when we carry golf bags, wear tennis shoes and bat cotton tennis balls over cotton nets; even when we go to the movies, for cotton enters into the production of motion picture film.

The soldier wears khaki and denim made from cotton; the aviators find it has been used in the manufacture of aircraft equipment; those who are ill whether at home or in the hospital have cotton bandages and other cotton materials.

Plastics Win Greater Place In Household

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

It looks as if our lives were going to be thoroughly synthetic before we've finished our laboratory experiments. But chemical substitutes for nature's products, which we once regarded as inferior, have now gained great face by their versatility and flexibility.

Among the most familiar uses of plastics in the home are the shower curtains and other bathroom appointments that are made of scientific mixtures of coal and air or equally incredible combinations. Coated fabrics, such as imitation leather, are water-proof and washable, while various coating materials for table tops, such as formica, provide a practical surface impervious to many stains. Plastic hardware for furniture and doors is interesting and practical—as are plastic mouldings because they catch highlights dramatically. Lighting fixtures of clear plastics are effective for the same reason—that the light reflects in an enchanting way, and flows in curves as well as in straight lines through plastic rods and tubes.

Tableware made of plastic, is often very charming. Certain types are as light as paper and yet they're amazingly staunch, standing hard wear and rough usage. Besides, many of them are made with air bubbles in them that give them a delicately translucent appearance.

Plastics for furniture are used to achieve interesting marquetry effects, to weld layers of veneers and as novel trim. Entire pieces of furniture are made of plastic too, the most adaptable forms being chairs, occasional tables and headboards for beds. Plastics have in certain instances been used as veneers for furniture, while woven panels for cabinet doors and cribs have proved practical. On the whole, however, plastics for furniture are still in an experimental stage, awaiting certain developments in surface textures, flexibility of color, improved methods of joining. Thus far they are more successful when used in combination with wood or glass.

Hollywood Taboos All Faddy Diets

Hollywood is definitely off that diet. No more strenuous reducing menus which cause ill health. Screen star Maureen O'Hara says it is best to keep your weight under control as you go along, eating a balanced diet with accent on fruits, vegetables, lean meats.

There is even a modern theory to the effect that you can lose weight on a meat diet. Maureen even eats a certain amount of whole wheat bread every day, for its important vitamin content. When she gets hungry between meals, she drinks clear fruit juice, particularly unsweetened grape juice.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Vaguely Unhappy in Five Years' Marriage, Wife Falls in Love With Another Man, Who Declines, On Principle, to Accept Her Love; She Asks Help

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I was married quite young, have been married for five years and am now in my early twenties. For several years, I have been unhappy, without knowing why, until about six months ago, when I realized I was not, and never had been, truly in love with my husband. I realize now that at the time I was married I was in love with love—a mistake so many young girls make.

I have now fallen in love with a man who has told me he is very much in love with me. Our love grew out of a casual friendship. We had much in common. We liked the same music and books and enjoyed each other's conversation immensely. In addition, there is a great physical attraction. I went away for a while, to pull myself together, as I seemed to be on the verge of a nervous breakdown. While I was away, this man wrote to me, saying that while he loved me deeply and strongly, he was afraid "things wouldn't work out." He said his mind would give him no rest, if he were to marry a friend's wife. I tried to explain to him, on my return, that figuratively, if not literally, the things he feared had already happened.

My desire for him is so strong that I can think of nothing else. Although I have tried for several weeks to realize that all is over between us, I just cannot accept it. How can I make him realize that he is ruining our lives? How can I approach him? In the meantime, my husband professes to be in love with me. And I wish I could reciprocate his love. But every time he so much as touches me, my thoughts turn to the other man—creating an emotional situation that is more than I can bear. Can you help me? ELSIE.

Her Attitude Is More Neurotic Than Romantic

DEAR ELSIE: I venture to doubt that you are truly in love with "the other man." More likely your erotic obsession directed at him is an outward manifestation of inward (or emotional) instability; or, in other words, of that neurotic distress which had made you unhappy for several years before you met him. I daresay if this sense of confusion, insecurity and vague, unhappy feeling of being a lost and lonely stranger in the universe could be corrected—by lancing, as it were (with phychiatric guidance), the psychic fester from which it stems—you would find you were able to live very comfortably without him.

In your unhappiness, you seized upon him—and still cling to his image—as a drowning man grabs at a straw. You seek some certitude in life, such as was either destroyed or, perhaps, never implanted, in your early years. And you think to find it in the realm of love—not knowing that, in order to make lasting and profitable terms with love, you must first come to terms of permanent peace with yourself.

The fact that you married quite young—while "in love with love," and blind to the real nature of the man you vowed to "love and cherish"—suggests that even then you were sightlessly seeking some means (almost any means) of escape from old unhappiness; groping dimly for an external panacea for your subjective (your inward) discontent. Young girls who are well adjusted, leading normal lives, abundantly stocked with wholesome interests and activities, don't jump into marriage, in their teens, with the first likely man who happens along. On the contrary, they consciously enjoy their carefree state, their "single blessedness," and prefer to prolong their girlhood into the twenties. Whereas girls from "unhappy backgrounds" incline to do just as you did—impulsively committing themselves to marriage at the earliest opportunity; on the theory, I suppose, that "any change would be an improvement" upon their current, unsatisfying status quo.

It is evident that the man has no desire to marry you—regardless of what his feelings, protestations and conduct may have been, in the clandestine romance. And your inability to elicit his support of your headlong desire to "swap horses in midstream" is adding terrifically to the long-time strain of nervous tension and psychic frustration you have borne—causing you, on the one hand, to see him feverishly out of perspective (so far as his worth and desirability are concerned); and bringing you, on the other hand, nearer to that nervous demoralization which latently lurks in your chronic neurosis.

My advice to you is (1) to relinquish any thought of linking your life with his, because your emotional fixation upon him is not love, but only an acute symptom of neurotic distress; and (2) to "get a line" on the basic difficulty by talking your whole problem of "personality dislocation" through with a mental hygienist, in a series of conferences. In the meantime, stay with your marriage and be loyal to your husband in thought and deed—grateful for his devotion, and appreciative of the immeasurable security (social, emotional and economic) which his protection and companionship represent. It is probable, indeed, that a problem such as yours can be better worked out within the framework of marriage (supposing your husband is at all congenial and admirable in character), than it could be if you were entirely "on your own," in your neurasthenic plight. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

New Booklet Explains Civil Service Jobs

UNCLE SAM'S payroll is the longest in the country, numbering over a million men and women. With the defense program the list grows rapidly—and it grows for women, too. More are in U. S. Civil Service today than ever before.

Where do men now have the best chance for a job? In the defense program. Among professional workers needed are civil and aeronautical engineers ($3,800 a year); among skilled workers are anglesmiths and coppersmiths u pto about $9.52 a day).

For those without special training there may be postoffice jobs. City mail carriers and postal clerks pass intelligence and aptitude tests, start as "regulars" at $1,700.

For young men who know one or more foreign languages, who have a fund of knowledge, the Foreign Service has jobs starting at $2,500.

For women, clerical work is a big field. A junior typist, an under card-punch operator start at $1,260. Junior graduate nurses receive $1,620 a year.

Diet Regime Possible to Those Who Do Not Eat at Home

By Ida Jean Kain

THERE ARE more grounds for not dieting than there are golfers' excuses. Someone is always complaining that she can't stay with a diet because she carries her lunch, or eats in restaurants, or has to work too hard. All these reasons are good.

But, even though you cannot diet, you can eat so intelligently that you will slim down gradually but steadily. The main difference is that you take your reducing more leisurely. That is actually an advantage. It gives you time to acquire a taste for the foods which will keep your weight normal.

If you carry your lunch, you will have to plan for meals that are both appetizing and slimming, but you really have everything your own way. Try to include a hot bouillon or clear soup or a hot beverage with a measured amount of cream and sugar—or none. Then for a change take along one-half pint of buttermilk or skim milk.

For the rest of the meal, how about a meat sandwich made with mustard or a thin spread of mayonnaise; some relishes—celery, pickles and carrot sticks wrapped in a wax paper to keep fresh—and a piece of fresh fruit. This only totals about 400 calories. There's a much better meal than a couple of sandwiches and a hunk of cake. You can reduce on it, provided the other two meals are on the same scale.

Three Simple Rules

If you eat in restaurants, a few tricks in ordering will turn the meals from fattening to slimming. Three very good rules are: No gravy, no mayonnaise, and no dessert! Choose vegetables that are served plain—not fried, scalloped or creamed. And order meats that are baked or broiled, not fried. When dessert comes with the dinner, you're apt to weaken and eat it. It is easier to give up dessert when you choose a menu which does not include this course.

If you ask me, the girl who really has a problem in dieting is the one who works in a restaurant or an institution where meals are part of her salary. It's almost like taking a pay cut to turn down food that is coming to you.

But stored calories are not the same as money in the bank. Fat is never anything but a liability for the woman past 25. If you take part of your pay in food, you can't afford to get into the habit of over-eating. It's too hard a habit to break. Here again, intelligent eating will have your figure—take the meat, but leave off the fat part and the gravy; take the vegetables and the salad without dressing; take only one slice of bread and one-half pat of butter per meal, and, if necessary, get up and leave the table before the dessert course.

Excess Fat Tiresome

The harder you have to work, the greater the burden of excess fat. Just imagine working for eight straight hours with a 50-pound sack of meal strapped to your back! That's how tiresome the same amount of excess weight is, only you don't notice it because you are accustomed to it. You should feel tops on a diet, because a good balanced diet contains foods that keep you feeling fit, and lets you slough off those burdensome pounds.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

THE MISSES Betty Lyon, of Purcellville, and Nancy Iselin, of Middleburg, are among the Virginia belles who went to the annual house parties at Princeton University over the weekend. They returned to their homes yesterday.

Lieut. J. Mackenzie Tabb is back again at Virginia Military Institute after weekending at his home near Middleburg. He was an usher at the wedding in Washington on Saturday of Miss Nancy Fleming to Lieut. Charles Francis Heasty.

CLARE BROKAW, daughter of Playwright Clare Booth, was program chairman at the annual Foxcroft Horse Show held yesterday on the grounds of the school. Other officers in the show included the Misses Adalaide Cole, president; Diana Gambrill, vice president; Kitty Van Pelt, secretary; Anne Ordway, assistant secretary; Averell Penn-Smith, treasurer; Nancy Redmond, general chairman; Helen Bruce, food; Kitty Wickes, tickets; Didi Sharples, parking, and Bettina Dilworth chairman of the cigarettes sold for the social service fund.

Seventeen classes, with silver cups awarded in each, were run off during the day. An interesting event was the Davis Challenge Cup for the alumnae. This trophy was presented by a former Foxcroft student, Mrs. Herbert Waller, the former Miss Mallory Davis, daughter of Thomas Davis, of New York.

Judges were George M. Humphrey, of Cleveland, and Maj. Henry Leonard, of Washington. Proceeds went to aid Britain and the local charities. Miss Charlotte Noland, headmistress, entertained at a luncheon for the parents of the girls who came to see the show and a buffet luncheon was served for the spectators.

THE CHARLESTOWN Jockey Club opened its 48-day summer meeting yesterday afternoon at 2:30. Hundreds attended. The clubhouse is spick and span, flags are flying, and all is in readiness for a season of six and seven good races daily.

William Bell Watkins, M. F. H., of the Blue Ridge Hunt in Clarke County, made his appearance yesterday as a racing steward. He fills a vacancy left by the recent resignation of Leslie Combs, of Charleston, W. Va., and Lexington, Ky. Mr. Combs has a large breeding establishment in Kentucky and was forced to give up the office of steward.

Walking on Air Reality in Home

A bit of "undercover" work by industrial scientists has changed "walking on air" from a mere figure of speech to a reality of wide interest to homemakers.

The new product of science is a permanently resilient carpet cushion made from sponge rubber that springs back into shape as soon as the pressure of a foot is lifted.

Though the new rubber cushioning cleverly simulates the color ad appearance of coventional material, it contains no textile fibre or fabric and is therefore permanently mothproof. The new product, evolved by the B. F. Goodrich laboratories, also contains special compounds to resist aging and prolong service life.

Manufacturers say the sponge rubber cushion prolongs rug life by protecting them against the grinding action of dust and dirt. The products sound-deadening qualities are already leading to large installations in apartment buildings, hotels and hospitals.

Famous Writers Coming Here In May to Be Widely Feted

Andre Maurois, French Author, To Lecture May 21

By Hope Ridings Miller

A SOCIAL CALENDAR that has centered around good-will emissaries for some time will take a literary turn the next few weeks. Scheduled to come to town before the end of May are several leading novelists and poets who are sure to be wined and dined and generally lionized during their stay.

Andre Maurois, the noted French author, who is scheduled for a lecture here on Wednesday evening, May 21, will be accompanied to Washington by Mme. Maurois, and parties in their honor are being planned. The French Ambassador, Gaston Henri-Haye, hopes to give a luncheon for them. Mrs. F. Burrall Hoffman will entertain at a dinner on May 20, and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dewey also will fete the visitors some time during their visit. On the evening of M. Maurois' lecture, Mrs. R. H. Dunlap will be a dinner hostess, and a number of similar fetes will serve as preludes to the event. The lecture itself, entitled "The Lessons of France," is to be given under the auspices of the Washington Chapter, United Committee for French Relief, Inc.

Since his forthcoming appearance in Washington is M. Maurois' first, although he has lectured widely in other American cities, tickets to the lecture are going at record rate. Proceeds from the benefit will be used toward providing French prisoners of war with packages of food and clothing which are to be shipped by way of the American Red Cross.

Mrs. Albert B. Dewey, who is chairman of the entertainment committee for the event, will entertain members of her committee, sponsors for the lecture, and a number of other friends at a large garden tea on Thursday. Yesterday afternoon the committee had a meeting at the home of Mrs. F. Burrall Hoffman, at 2216 Massachusetts Avenue.

Mrs. Roosevelt Heads Patrons' List

Mrs. Roosevelt recently accepted an invitation to head the list of patrons for the lecture. Others include Representative and Mrs. Charles Dewey, the Under Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. James V. Forrestal, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mr. and Mrs. F. Lammot Belin, Mrs. Winthrop Chanler, Mrs. Dwight Davis, Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, Miss Janet Fish, Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, jr., Mr. and Mrs. John Hay Ide, Mrs. Walter Lippmann, Miss Anne Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran Thom, Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker, Mrs. Arthur Woods, Mrs. George Gordon, Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Mrs. Hennen Jennings, Mrs. Coleman Jennings, and Mrs. Lionel Atwill.

A number of parties also will swirl around Pulitzer Prize-winner Stephen Vincent Benet, who will appear to read some of his poetry at the Library of Congress on Thursday evening, May 29. The program will be the fourth in an American poets series, sponsored by the Librarian of Congress, Archibald MacLeish, and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer. Mrs. Benet will accompany her husband to Washington, and the two are sure to be widely entertained. On former visits here the noted author and poet and his wife have been guests of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence V. Benet, of 2101 Connecticut Avenue.

Arriving in town today, for a very brief stay, will be Mrs. William Astor Chanler, of New York, who will be with Miss Maxine Davis during her visit. Mrs. Chanler, the author of "Cleopatra's Daughter," is now working on another book that will combine a fascinating chapter from history with a study of a fascinating woman who helped to change the course of the world.

Mrs. Dubose Heyward To visit Here

Mrs. DuBose Heyward, widow of the famous playwright, who is carrying on much of the work started by her husband, will be in Washington early in June to visit her aunt, Mrs. William Hamilton Bayly, at the Roosevelt Hotel. She will be en route from her home in Charleston, S. C., to the MacDowell colony at Petersborough, N. H., and chances are she won't linger long around these parts.

Two years ago the Rockefeller Foundation granted a fund to the Dock Street Theater, Charleston, to establish DuBose Heyward as a resident dramatist. Mr. Heyward, assisted by his wife, spent much time initiating a system that would encourage young playwrights. Since his death Mrs. Heyward has carried on the activities of the Playwrighting Group, which is making theater history down in Charleston.

AN ALL-AMERICAN luncheon, featuring corned beef and cabbage and apple pie, will draw a number of Washingtonians to the Raleigh Hotel on Saturday when Felix Morley, president of Haverford College, will speak before the Washington Chapter of the America First Committee. I understand reservations are pouring in to committee headquarters by the dozens, and that a distinguished company, including a number of Senators and Representatives, will be on hand to hear Mr. Morley.

Mrs. Villaret Fetes Gen., Mrs. Blood

Gen. and Mrs. Kenneth T. Blood, who will leave in a few days for Boston, were the guests in whose honor Mrs. Eugene Villaret, wife of Col. Villaret, entertained at a buffet supper last night at her home on Springland Lane.

Others in the company were Maj. Gen. Joseph A. Green, chief of Coast Artillery, and Mrs. Green, and the latter's sister, Mrs. Laura Pettengill, of Texas; Maj. Gen. Allen W. Gullion, Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox and Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Harold Loomis.

Fabulous Parmelee Estate Open for Seamen's Benefit

By Elizabeth Hennev

Washington's mystery mansion, the Parmelee Estate, was thrown open to the public yesterday afternoon, in the name of charity, for the first time in the memory of most Washingtonians. The occasion was the book tea for the benefit of the American Merchant Marine Library Association. Technical host and hostess for the event, though neither of them were present, were the new owners of the property, the head of the Presidential Coordinating Committee for Relief and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies. Mrs. Davies is at present in Hot Springs, Ark., for her annual rest cure.

Congressional service set and residential Washingtonians (but no diplomats) flocked to the fabulous estate, where bluejacketed Coast Guard sailors manned the gates to take tickets, the uniformed Navy Band played gay tunes in the garden before the house; blue-clad Girl Scout mariners were on hand to collect the donated books, and the afternoon ended on a high note while all guests stood at rigid attention to the stirring notes of the "Star-Spangled Banner."

Not One Diplomat Present at Affair

The house, terrace and gardens were filled by socialites and philanthropists all afternoon, and echoing through the conversation during the whole affair was one query—Why was it, that when Washingtonians, all of them, as well as others in this country, give so generously of their time and funds to foreign causes, not one diplomat felt impelled to show up for a benefit for this country? One prominent bachelor recalled the absence of diplomats from the recent Red Cross benefit, and wondered whether the modern idea is only of reciprocal help, or of just squeezing the United States dry.

In the meantime guests were exploring eagerly the house and gardens which have been the subject of speculation for many years. Owned, until her death last fall, by Mrs. James Parmelee, the estate has long been shrouded in mystery.

From an old family retainer came the statement that in all the 20 years he had worked for Mrs. Parmelee the house had never been opened to the public, and as for the gardens, ten gardeners had been employed to keep it in condition, and any guest who disrespectfully stepped upon a blade of grass was promptly reproved by Mrs. Parmelee herself. Inside the house, said the retainer, "Jinks," you could look in any direction and see $1,000,000 worth of treasures.

Mrs. Mary Stewart, Mrs. McNary in Charge

Generally in charge for the afternoon was Mrs. Mary Stewart, and general chairman was Mrs. Charles McNary. Mrs. Henry Howard, founder of the organization, came down from Boston for the event, and came with her hostess, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor.

Assisting at the tea tables were Mrs. Preston Delano, Mrs. Charles Oman, Mrs. Keith Merrill, Mrs. Walter Heiberg, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, looking chic in soft green with a hat to match; Mrs. Emil Hurja, whose dark outfit was a perfect background for her small diamond-studded lavaliere watch; Mrs. Edward Bruce, Mrs. Daniel Knowlton, Mrs. George Thorpe, Mrs. Hamilton Fish, and Mrs. Harold R. Stark, wife of Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations.

On the terrace Mrs. Sydney Cloman was being lionized as the town's latest literary light, and reported that the first edition of her first book, "I'd Live It Over," has already been sold out. She was accompanied by her niece, Mrs. Clifton Phillips. Lyman Beecher Stowe, great-grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, was also the center of much attention.

Others noted were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Jesse Jones, Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mrs. Warren Austin, Mrs. Otis Bland, Mrs. Russell Waesche, wife of Admiral Waesche, Commandant of the Coast Guard (she was in charge of the Ship's Library display); Mrs. John Dempsey, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, Miss Elizabeth Howry, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Lady Broderick, Mrs. George T. Marye and her house guest, Mrs. Robert Walsh; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln O'Brien, Mrs. Henry Jewett, Mrs. Harry Huse, Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill, Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth, Donna Julia Brambilla, Miss Pauletta Guffey, Miss Mary E. Patten, Mrs. Ollie James, Mrs. John H. Gibbons, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence V. Benet, Miss Elizabeth Howry and hundreds more.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

THE MANY who are wailing about finding lebensraum in Washington may feel better to know that Leon Henderson, the price czar, is among the uncomfortable company. Mr. Henderson, whose organization of Production and Civilian Supply is studying rents, cannot even find office space for all of his workers.

The other day Mr. Henderson had to listen to some first hand complaints from a consumer—his wife. Mrs. Henderson, hearing that the house they lease here was to be sold over their heads, went out in search of another. After combing the town without finding anything, she learned that fortunately their house will not be sold after all.

Mrs. Henderson will leave this week for the place they own on a river about 4 miles from Annapolis. Her three children will join her but the head of the house, who has always commuted daily in the summer, is now so busy that he will motor down only for weekends. The family goes into shorts and slacks for the entire summer and the children have a wonderful time sailing their boats.

ANOTHER distinguished victim of the housing situation is Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, former Minister to Norway. "Daisy" looked everywhere in Washington without finding the kind of home she wanted. So she has taken up residence in New York, while making frequent trips to the Capital. The Albert Deweys' lease on her Foxhall Road home, Uplands, runs until August, so Mrs. Harriman probably won't settle here until next fall. Incidentally, Mr. and Mrs. Dewey will give a cocktail party on Thursday at Uplands.

THE MOST ORIGINAL residence this column has ever heard of is that which Mrs. Ethel Clark, librarian of the Bliss collection, will occupy. Toward the end of the month she will move into the dog house at Dumbarton Oaks. An attractive little red brick building, it was formerly the home of the three large Bliss dogs and their handler. It is being remodeled, and set as it is in the woods near the swimming pool, promises to be an idyllic cottage. Mr. and Mrs. Bliss are still in California and will probably remain there all summer.

"I THINK we've walked 10 miles today," said Commander Edmund E. Brady at the cocktail party which Capt. and Mrs. Alan Kirk gave for the Latin American Navy chiefs. The visitors had been all over the Navy Yard on foot and were still smiling after standing in the Kirk receiving line for two hours.

Mapping the South Americans' tour through the country, seeing that dignitaries would be on hand to meet them, and so forth, took Commander Brady all of 14 full days. At Norfolk last week he had a bad moment when he learned their plane to Washington must leave two hours earlier owing to weather conditions, and that the visitors would arrive ahead of the official welcoming party. He had to think fast. The problem was solved by his phoning to Washington for a fleet of cars to meet the plane and then taking his charges to Mount Vernon for a look around and a soft drink. Commander Brady was among the American officers who helped build the Brazilian Navy Yard and has known Vice Admiral Castro e Silva, the Brazilian navy chief, for 14 years.

SOCIAL NOTES: The Secretary of War and Mrs. Henry Stimson were among the guests at the garden party given Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Matheson. The Stimsons strolled about the beautiful old Virginia garden, with its fabulous boxwood and view of the Capitol dome from across the river. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Alex Legare gave a luncheon the same day at Grasslands, when the former Netherlnds Minister to Great Britain and Mme. von Swinderen were "among those present." . . . Mrs. Eldridge Jordan has cards out for a cocktail party on Thursday. . . . The Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. esse Jones will be honor guests at Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock's dinner tonight.

Pretheater Parties Held

Many gay dinner parties preceded the Washington opening last night of the movie "Fantasia." Among the hostesses was Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, chairman of Young America Wants to Help, which raised funds for Britain by sponsoring the premiere.

Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper were the ranking guests at Mrs. Roosevelt's party. Others included Gen. and Mrs. Edwin Watson and Col. and Mrs. Rex Benson, of the British Embassy.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding entertained at their home in Georgetown. Their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann, Mr. and Mrs. John Walker, Mrs. Charles Hofer, Myron Hofer, Mrs. Charles Baker, Miss Patricia Baker, who sold programs at the theater; Mrs. Charles Warner, whose husband is in London for the Civil Aeronautics Authority; James Hendrick, Quentin Hill, of the British Purchasing Commission and Earl Stevens.

Other hosts at dinners before the premiere were Countesse de Baillet Latour, Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mrs. Theodore Achilles and Robert Coe.

Mrs. Clapper Gives Luncheon

Mrs. Bennet Champ Clark was ranking guest at a small luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Raymond Clapper at her home on Chain Bridge Road.

Others in the company were Mrs. Preston Delano, Mrs. Raymond Lee, Mrs. John O. Herrick, Mrs. Norman Frost, Mrs. Theodore Benson, Mrs. Alexander F. Jones, and Mrs. Lyle Wilson.

The party was one in a series that Mrs. Clapper has planned during the season.

Mrs. Head Arrives From Fort Sill

Mrs. N. Landon Head, wife of Capt. Head, has arrived from Fort Sill, Okla., for a visit of several weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sears Henning, of Washington.

Mrs. Head will be matron of honor at the wedding of her sister, Miss Barbara Henning, to Cadet Thomas O'Connell. The ceremony will take place at Walter Reed Chapel on June 12.

Wadsworths Fete Sixteen at Dinner

Representative and Mrs. James Wadsworth entertained at dinner last evening in their home on N Street. Covers were laid for 16.

Guests were Representative and Mrs. Clarence Hancock, Mrs. James V. Forrestal, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mr. and Mrs. Elljott Wadsworth, Maj. Gen. Mason Wright, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Capt. Edward Macauley, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Coffin and Stewart McDonald.

Best Air Force Goal Of U. S., Arnold Says

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

"Yes, we will have an air force in time. It is well on its way and will be ready when called upon."

This was the statement of Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the United States Army Air Corps, yesterday in an address at the last of the series of information hour programs on national defense, sponsored by the Women's National Democratic Club.

"Today, the Air Corps is rapidly getting ready for trial by battle," he said.

"Tomorrow, it will be better prepared.

"And a year from today, a year from tomorrow, it will be even better prepared.

"We need and we want all the time we can get. Every day we can live on borrowed time means we are one day nearer to complete preparedness for our part in the national defense.

"Now, although I am a patient man, I have no patience with those uninformed and misguided croakers who look with thick-lensed glasses for indications that the Air Corps is helpless, that the Air Corps is not properly trained or equipped, cannot be made ready to fight, and is being furnished with planes inferior to those of England or Germany.

"World conditions today are critical, not only for England, but for the United States. It is extremely difficult to predict just what the future has in store.

"But regardless of what we in the Army may be called upon to do, we must have an Air Force second to none—an Air Force capable of meeting any other plane for plane—man for man. For every ton of bombs they can drop on us, we must be able to drop two tons on them.

"It takes time to build up such an Air Force—but fortunately we had a President who foresaw the necessity.

Cites April Output Of 1,427 Planes

Gen. Arnold, who has recently returned from abroad, said his lips were officially sealed on where he went or what he did but told the women he would speak freely about what was being done in Air Corps preparedness. He cited the April production of 1,427 military airplanes as indication that the country was hitting its stride toward the goal set by the President of "command of the air by the democracies."

"I can tell you that one of the world's fastest pursuit airplanes, the Airacobra, is now in production in the United States. This remarkable airplane is worthy of its name. It is armed not only with machine guns, but with cannon as well. To facilitate operating these guns and provide better visibility for the pilot, the engine is located in back of the pilot. We expect great things of the Airacobra, in its final form with armor plate and its leakproof tanks.

"In this day and age our fighting planes with their keen, alert pilots must be able to climb rapidly high into the air—far above hostile bombers. They must be able to maneuver easily and have the speed to place themselves where they can blow their adversary's plane into a thousand pieces. That our Airacobra can do," declared Gen. Arnold.

"Our B-17's—the famous Flying Fortresses — have already won their spurs by accomplishing very difficult missions over Germany. They can carry loads far and fast at altitudes that give hostile fighting planes a somewhat difficult problem when an interception is attempted.

"Lockheeds daily carry out patrols over the North Sea from Arctic Norway, over Denmark to Holland and Belgium. Martins are working daily over the Mediterranean. That should give an answer to our critics who claim our planes cannot be used and are not being used in combat overseas.

12,000 Pilots Trained a Year

"We know we face a hard task in getting the number and kind of planes we must have, but we are not concerned over the ultimate ability of American ingenuity and American determination and American energy to surmount either the quantity or the quality problem."

Pilots are now being trained at the rate of 12,000 a year and this number soon will be increased to 30,000, he said. At the moment, he said, more than 8,500 are in training. There are flying schools located in the Southern States, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and he added that "our system is such that we can expand without lowering our standards."

The first of the new flying schools in the 30,000 a year pilot training program will be at Dothan, Ala., he said.

Mrs. Francis Biddle, wife of the Solicitor General, introduced Gen. Arnold. Mrs. Curtis Shears, president of the club, opened the meeting and Mrs. Meade Fletcher, education committee chairman, presided.

Members of the Civil Aeronautic Board were present, including Harllee Branch, chairman; Dr. George Baker, Oswald Ryan, Grant Mason and J. Parker Van Zandt. Among other distinguished guests were Gen. and Mrs. Russell Maxwell, Mrs. Hugo Black, Mrs. Robert Jackson, Mrs. Jesse Jones, Mrs. Paul McNutt, Mrs. Frank Hines, Mrs. John Biggers, Mrs. Stanley Hornbeck, Mr. Shears, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Mrs. Wade Ellis and Baroness J. V. Van Eck, of Greenwich, Conn.

A NEW IDEA in scholarships is being worked out by the M. Eleanor Brackenridge Club which plans to establish a "Friendship Scholarship" for business women from the Latin-American countries.

The club, of which Mrs. E. W. Schwartze is founder and president, is dedicated to the spirit of friendship which was exemplified by the Texas clubwoman and philanthropist for whom it is named. It includes in its membership girls from many sections of the country, and branches have been started outside of Washington. Already it has provided scholarships for business courses to several girls each year.

The new plan, in line with the Good Neighbor Policy of the United States, is to offer a young business woman, preferably a Government worker from one of the Latin-American countries, the opportunity to come here for a two months' stay. She must have had a year's study of English before coming. On her arrival, she will be entertained at the home of one of the members of the club during her visit and be enrolled in an English course. When her classes are over at 3 o'clock each afternoon, she will be met by one of the club members and taken to places of interest in and near the Capital. Her friends from the club will be prepared to give her a practical rather than a theoretical understanding of America and American life.

All of her expenses will be paid by the club while she is here and she will have the opportunity the average visitor or student does not have of being accepted as one of the group which sponsors her. Although the cash value of the scholarship will be only about $200 and will not include the girl's transportation to Washington, the contribution to friendship is expected to make it of greater value than many where a larger sum is offered. It is the desire of the club that young women who are awarded the scholarship return to their own country and organize similar groups there so that young business women from here can be given similar opportunities to visit and become acquainted with the Latin-American countries.

The girl will be selected soon, and is to come to Washington in September, according to Mrs. Schwartze. A schedule covering every day of her two months' visit has been worked out by the club.

LEGAL SORORITY ELECTS—Eta Alumnae Chapter of Kappa Beta Pi Sorority has elected Mrs. Sera Mero Williams as its dean for the coming year. Other new officers are Margaret Farmer, associate dean; M. Arrangements for the tea are in charge of Mrs. Horace W. Barber, general chairman, assisted by Mrs. Ivan J. Riley, co-chairman; Mrs. J. Stanley Long, in charge of hospitality; Mrs. J. W. Taylor, decorations; Mrs. Robert L. Bell, cakes; Mrs. J. S. Bixler, refreshments; Mrs. Riley, the home table, assisted by residents of the home; Mrs. Howell Bartle, Candy; Mrs. J. Fred Laise, tea room.

Members of the Methodist Ministers' Wives Association will alternate at the tea table and assist in serving. Members of the board, of which Mrs. Harry Hoskinson is president, will receive the guests. A program of music will be given by Miss Virginia Harpham, violinist, and Mrs. John Klein, Mrs. John Smith and Mrs. Ralph Wolfe, pianists.

The Methodist Home was founded in 1889 to care for the dependent aged of the Methodist churches of the Washington District, Baltimore Conference. Since then 275 needy men and women have found sanctuary there.

Los Angeles B'nai B'rith Leader Speaks

Mrs. Lenore D. Underwood, president of the Women's Supreme Council of B'nai B'rith of Los Angeles, yesterday addressed the first annual convention of the women's District Grand Lodge, No. 5. She spoke at a luncheon in the Shoreham Hotel, with about 500 attending.

Mrs. Underwood declared the strength of every community lay in the character of its citizens, pointing out that many countries have been overrun and destroyed not in open conflict but because the national will crumbled and defeat was then inevitable. She urged the women to carry on the program of their organization in their home cities for the benefit of young people and of the community as a whole, bringing out unity through their work.

Maurice Bisgyer, national secretary of B'nai B'rith, outlined three common approaches to achieve unity and to support democracy. The first was based on organization, the second on good neighborliness, and the third on race. He spoke also on methods of combatting subversive elements and gave an historical account of Jewish personalities and ethics which had contributed to unity in the past.

Mrs. Henry Monsky, wife of the president of the supreme lodge, was present as a guest of honor and commended Mrs. Lawrence Koenigsberger on the work of both the local and district auxiliaries, of which she is president. Mrs. Maurice L. Bernstein, general chairman of the luncheon, introduced committee chairmen, officers of the district and guests who were at the speakers' table. Mrs. Bisgyer, chairman of the program under the auspices of the Jewish Women's Joint Institute of Washington, introduced Mrs. Underwood.

Among out-of-town women who were honor guests were Mrs. Rose Bertram, of Los Angeles, past grand president of District No. 4 and now Western regional director of the Los Angeles Sanatorium; Mrs. Sol S. Goldstrom, of Miami, vice president of District 5, and Mrs. Joe Goldstein, of Galax, Va., treasurer of District 5.

Mrs. Waters Heads B.P.W.C.

Mrs. Laura Waters last night was elected president of the Business and Professional Women's Club to succeed Dr. Florence Armstrong. The election took place at a meeting at the Admiral Club.

The new officers are: Vice presidents, Mrs. Brownie Kerr; recording secretary, Miss Helen Neal; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Bernice Potter; treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Mann; directors, Miss Margaret Rauber and Miss Margaret Sweeney.

Court Refuses Review to Aide Of Huey Long

By the Associated Press

Abraham I. Shushan, one-time lieutenant of Huey P. Long in Louisiana, and four others failed yesterday to obtain a Supreme Court review of their conviction on a charge of using the mail in a scheme to defraud.

The Supreme Court also refused today to narrow the definition of a farmer entitled to seek a composition of indebtedness under the Frazier-Lemke Farm Mortgage Moratorium Act.

It held unanimously that the definition contained in the Frazier-Lemke measure had not been altered by the Chandler Act passed in 1938 to revise the general bankruptcy laws.

A farmer, the Frazier-Lemke Act said, is an individual "primarily" engaged in farm activities or one who derives the principal part of his income from such sources.

"Personally Engaged"

The Chandler Act said the individual must be "personally engaged" in the farm activities even though "the principal part of his income" was derived from them.

The decision, delivered by Justice Murphy, applied to litigation brought by Carlota Benitez Sampayo, of Ponce, Puerto Rico, who sought an extension or composition of indebtedness on the ground that she raised chickens at her home and received an income from a sugar company.

The Supreme Court agreed to reconsider the last of the eight cases recently decided by four-to-four decisions.

Review Granted in Auto Case

Rehearings had been granted in the other seven cases and arguments set for next October. By that time President Roosevelt is expected to have filled the vacancy created by the retirement last February 1 of Justice James C. McReynolds.

The court granted reconsideration yesterday of the decision which had held constitutional New York legislation ordering the permanent cancellation of automobile drivers' permits unless insurance was taken out after one accident in which a court found a driver at fault and gave judgment against him.

The litigation was brought by George C. Reitz, at Utica.

The court refused to review a decision dismissing on procedural grounds an attack by the Safe Harbor Water Power Corporation, which operates a hydroelectric Power Lancaster, Pa., on a Federal Power Commission order directing a rate reduction for electricity.

N. U. Debaters Defeat Carnegie On Union Issue

Advocating the affirmative of the British union question, the debating team of National University last night defeated Carnegie Institute of Technology's team at Pittsburgh.

The debate was the first of three in which National's team of Harry Gaberman and Anne Murphy will participate during the week. From Pittsburgh they will go to Lexington, Ky., for a match with the University of Kentucky on Wednesday. Windup of the tour will be Friday's debate with the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

Both seniors, Gaberman and Miss Murphy recently defeated the debating team of Harvard University on the same question of union with Britain.

Knitters Asked To Aid Britain

An appeal for voluntary knitters to make garments for the British fighting forces was issued yesterday by Bundles for Britain, Inc.

Wool yarn in khaki for the army, blue for the navy and steel gray for the air force is available at all Bundles for Britain offices, of which there are 975 in the United States, it was said. The wool will be given those who wish to knit, but are unable to purchase the materials, the announcement said.

Securities Act Study Near End

By the Associated Press

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., May 12.—Recommendations for revising the Federal Securities Act will be ready for presentation to Congress within two weeks, the Investment Bankers Association was informed in a committee report today.

R. McLean Stewart, chairman of the securities act committee, reporting on the results of conferences between representatives of the Securities and Exchange Commission, investment bankers and securities dealers, dispelled earlier doubt as to when the proposals would be ready.

It was indicated that the report might be submitted to Congress in the form of a bill.

Meanwhile, President Emmett F. Connely, of Detroit, said he would not stand for a third term, either as president or as chairman of the important public information committee.

Connely broke an I. B. A. precedent last year by his reelection for a second term.

Jean C. Witter, San Francisco, chairman of the nominating committee and himself a former I. B. A. president, would give no hint as to Connely's probable successor.

Officers are elected by mail ballot during the summer, the term to begin in the Autumn.

The delegates heard from Albert H. Gordon, New York, chairman of the industrial securities committee, an appeal for use of private capital wherever possible in defense expansion.

His report conceded that "certain unusual demands for plant expansion and re-equipment demand speedy action made possible through Government financing agencies."

It was claimed, however, that "in all but few instances," private financing could do the job.

NLRB Ruling Upheld in Bethlehem Dispute

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals here yesterday upheld a National Labor Relations Board order disestablishing the Employes Representation Plans of the Bethlehem Steel Co., a controversial organization which has been the bone of contention in strikes this spring at three of the company's huge plants.

In a two-to-one decision, the court sustained the NLRB's contention that the E. R. P. was company dominated and that the company violated the National Labor Relations Act.

The majority opinion was written by Associate Justice Henry W. Edgerton, with Associate Justice Fred M. Vinson concurring. In a voluminous dissent of 78 printed pages, Associate Justice Harold M. Stephens held that the NLRB had misconstrued the law, that the order should be set aside and the case remanded to the board for a new hearing.

The NLRB order calls for the disestablishment of the E. R. P. in nine company plants.

Justice Edgerton found that the E. R. P. was created by the company; that "there is no evidence that a majority of the men in any of the plants have ever approved of the plans or have been given an opportunity to vote for or against it;" that the company held out the E. R. P. as part of company policy and facilitated and encouraged voting in it and had told employes not to join other unions, specifically the S. W. O. C.

Another NLRB order, which was previously sustained by the District Court of Appeals, was appealed yesterday to the Supreme Court by the Press Co., Inc., publishers of the Knickerbocker News, Albany, N. Y.

The company, which the board had ordered to reinstate with back pay three editorial employes dismissed in 1937, contended that the employes had not been discriminated against because of Newspaper Guild activity, but had been let go along with 26 other editorial workers when the paper abandoned its morning and Sunday editions.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Klutz

Employes Favor Staggered Payday

A plan to really stagger Government paydays by paying a tenth of the employes on each of five days a week—Mondays through Fridays — has been received favorably by Federal employes and their representatives. The proposal calls for 26 paydays a year instead of 24 for the individual employe. However, Uncle Sam under the plan would pay a tenth of his employes here on each of 260 days a year, or 5 times a week. The plan would equalize the flow of the Federal pay roll here, which is more than $31,000,000 monthly and is growing daily. It would prevent general confusion on paydays.

Federal officials say legislation wouldn't be necessary to put any staggered payday plan into effect. It isn't known generally, but the Bureau of Engraving and Printing already staggers the pay of its employes. The printing division, for example, is paid on the 8th and 22d of each month. All other employes are paid on the 15th and last day of the month as with the other 190,000 Federal employes here. The plan has been in operation at the bureau for a score of years and officials say it works beautifully.

Senator Arthur Capper, ranking Republican member of the Senate District Committee, yesterday introduced a bill which would place the bureau plan on a Government-wide basis. His bill would pay half the employes on the 15th and 30th, the remaining half on the 7th and the 22d.

Any staggered plan, officials believe, would add very little to the Government's administrative cost. The Treasury Department computes the amounts and writes each check. It's believed unofficially that the department would absorb the added cost, if any. General Accounting Office audits each check and there would be roughly 2,500,000 additional checks a year, which, of course, would be some extra work, but a trivial matter when it's considered that the Government writes approximately 150,000,000 checks annually.

Miss Gertrude McNally, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Federal Employes, said she couldn't see any possible objection to the staggered pay plan. She added that the merchants stood to benefit the most from the proposal but she thought it would be of general benefit to everyone. To get the plan operating smoothly, Miss McNally said, probably would cause some confusion and inconvenience.

James Burns, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, said he personally viewed the staggered pay plan as another effort to relieve the congestion and rush in this crowded city. "I look upon the plan with favor," Burns said. He explained that he hadn't made contact with the membership on the proposition.

The Washington Board of Trade has sent a questionnaire to its members on the pay plan. William Press, executive secretary, reported early returns showed some merchants for and others against. He had no idea of the result, but recalled that merchants in the organization voted against it when a payday change was proposed years ago.

Some of Washington's banks remain open to 5:30 o'clock on Government paydays. Any change in paydays would affect the banks. A. M. McLachlen, president of the District Bankers Association, revealed he was making a study of the proposed pay plan. "Broadly speaking," he commented, "banks will adjust themselves for the public welfare." McLachlen doubted very much whether the association would favor or oppose the staggered plan.

IRIS SHOW—The Woodridge Garden Club's iris show was staged last night in the McKendree Methodist Church. Elizabeth Crist, 11, of 1721 Evarts Street Northeast, admires the two-shade iris arrangement that won first prize in the arrangements class for Mrs. Hazelle Johnson

With a total of 31 points, H. J. Clay won the sweepstakes in the Woodridge Garden Club's annual iris show last night in McKendree Methodist Church, Twenty-fourth Street and Rhode Island Avenue Northeast. Thirty exhibitors displayed more than 200 floral entries.

Judges declared that the prize for the best seedling in the show was won by Winn T. Simmons, who exhibited a Buster Blue. Award for the best bearded iris was won by Mrs. G. R. Goergens with a "San Francisco" offering.

Hazelle Johnson took first prize for the best arrangement in show, and Mrs. Burgess was honored for exhibiting the best arrangement in which other flowers predominated.

Southeast Businessmen Favor Proposal to Stagger Paydays

The Southeast Businessmen's Association last night went on record as favoring the proposed staggered pay day plan. Distribution of checks to half the Government employes on the eighth and twenty-second of each month would do much to stabilize business activity in the District, it was said.

Another resolution placed the association in opposition to any regulation whereby the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board could prohibit the advertising of liquor prices in the District. After discussing reported water shortages in the Southeast area, the membership voted to urge construction of a reservoir there. Proposed street-car loading platforms on H Street Southeast were branded as hazards that would bottleneck traffic.

The businessmen also urged establishment of another taxicab zone to enable Southeast citizens to ride cabs as cheaply as residents in the Northwest.

National Gateway

The National Gateway Citizens Association last night went on record in favor of the nine-man recreational board proposed by the District Board of Education.

Opposition was expressed to any change in the administrative policy of the United States Employment Service. The group held its regular meeting at the Church of Christ, Twenty-eighth and Douglas Streets Northeast.

West End Trolley Change

West End Citizens Association last night adopted a resolution requesting the Capital Transit Co. to run the Benning cars through to Washington Circle to be turned around, instead of at Fifteenth Street and New York Avenue Northwest.

In another resolution the association urged National Capital Parks to improve Washington Circle's shrubbery and grass. A third resolution requested the postmaster's attention to the morning mail delivery in the West End section. Several persons at the meeting said their morning mail which formerly came at 9:30 or 10 now sometimes arrives two hours later.

Harry Gichner made a Community Chest talk at the meeting at No. 3 Police Precinct. James F. Duhamel spoke on early Washington history. Five new members were elected: Merlin J. Pitt, Mrs. Julia M. Williams, the Rev. John R. Edwards, Mrs. Marguerite Krenek and Mrs. Estella Sykes.

Dance Hostesses For Army Widen Scope of Activity

The girls who registered recently as dance hostesses with the District Defense Council last night planned to broaden their activities to include first aid, knitting and sewing for the Red Cross, tennis playing and other athletics, and possibly home guard organizing.

More than 450 of the hostesses met last night in the Government Printing Office Harding Hall, and heard several appeals for their services. Otto S. Lund, manager of the District Red Cross, told the girls of "a desperate need for garments and surgical dressings." He also announced first aid courses in which they might enroll.

House Passes 4 District Bills

By unanimous consent the House yesterday passed four minor District bills.

Two of the measures would increase the powers of the Board of Welfare to care for dependent children. A third would authorize the Federal Security Administrator to accept gifts for St. Elizabeths Hospital while a fourth would provide for admission of Foreign Service employes to the hospital.

Sixteenth Street Is on Its Way to Becoming City's Most Modern North-South Boulevard

This is the eleventh article in a series about improvements in the District highway system as suggested in the report of the Highway Planning Survey.

By Howard F. Wentworth

Post Staff Writer

With completion of the underpass now being constructed beneath Scott Circle, Sixteenth Street will be well on its way to becoming the city's most modernized north-south arterial boulevard.

The Scott Circle tunnel, scheduled to be finished sometime in November, is but the first step in extensive changes contemplated for Sixteenth Street under the Highway Planning Survey.

The Northwest area east of Rock Creek Park is described in the report of Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, as "the most thickly populated in the District and carrying the highest registration of motor vehicles." He said the development of direct routes serving this section is of the utmost importance to future planning.

Routes slated to become model express motorways are Sixteenth, Thirteenth, Eleventh, Ninth and Sixth Streets Northwest.

Once the Scott Circle underpass is completed, to run north and south in line with Sixteenth, plans call for various widening projects at major intersections from Florida Avenue northward.

More than 3,000 vehicles enter the city along Sixteenth Street daily, Whitehurst pointed out, and they merge almost immediately with the heavy normal flow of cars entering the thoroughfare inside the District limits.

To provide adequate reservoir facilities, at least a dozen intersection points must be revamped and widened, he added.

A "major operation," said Whitehurst, will be performed at the intricate crossing of Columbia Road and Harvard Street. Although plans to redesign this intersection are as yet tentative, the traffic flow probably would be segregated by a system of grade separations, it was reported.

Thirteenth Street is considered of next importance in the trunk highway development and proposals for its modernization have been discussed in an earlier article in this series.

The 1942 highway work budget already provides for improvements to Sixth Street. It now extends only from Constitution Avenue to Florida Avenue, but is heavily traveled and collects a large volume of east-west traffic at numerous points.

It is planned to extend the Sixth Street widening program from D Street to Florida Avenue Northwest by next year, Whitehurst declared, and it would be extended later to connect with Fourth Street and thence into Park Place Northwest.

This, said Whitehurst, would provide a direct route to North Capitol Street with connections into Fifth Street.

Plans for the future also call for the widening and extension of Ninth Street north of U Street into and through Sherman Avenue Northwest. Eleventh Street, under the trunk-line program, would be widened from Vermont to Florida Avenue Northwest.

Shimon Denies Immunity Pledge To Defendant for Implicating Newman

Charges against present and former Police Court judges and officers echoed in the District Court as the conspiracy trial of Joseph R. Burko, former clerk, closed yesterday before Justice F. Dickinson Letts.

The case was closed Friday, but reopened for more testimony yesterday. After Justice Letts gives his instructions today, the one woman and 11 men jurors will deliberate on the charges that Burko schemed to steal fines.

The justice granted a request of Defense Counsel James J. Laughlin that the jurors also be instructed to consider Burko's counter charge that Police Judge Walter J. Casey and District Attorney Edward M. Curran (a former police judge) plotted to persecute him, so he would incriminate Police Judge Hobart Newman.

Over Laughlin's objection, Assistant District Attorney Allen J. Krouse yesterday obtained leave to reopen his case and call Detective Sergt. Joseph W. Shimon, Curran's chief investigator. Burko testified that Shimon promised him immunity if he would incriminate Newman.

Krouse had asked Justice Letts to prevent Laughlin asking Shimon about a conviction in Salem, Mass., September 16, 1924. Justice Letts refused.

Immunity Promise Denied

When the case was reopened yesterday, Shimon denied that he promised Burko immunity. Under questioning by Krouse, Shimon then disclosed that he had pleaded guilty to an indictment on a statutory charge, said the offense was a felony, that he was 17 years old when the offense was committed and that he was placed on probation for 12 months. Shimon said the conviction was on his civil service record.

Krouse began his closing argument by calling Burko a Fifth Columnist, a traitor, a liar, an octopus, a man without conscience and a rat.

Laughlin protested the term "rat" and made his fourth motion for a mistrial, which was refused.

Krouse told the jurors Burko's charge of a plot against him was a "pall of smoke" raised to obscure the issues.

Casey Excoriated

Laughlin excoriated Casey as one of the plotters against Judge Newman, and declared Casey's handling of the Mattie Edwards case proved him "unfit for a judge."

Star witness for the Government was James Edward Sullivan, former bailiff, who said he and Burko plotted to steal fines. Sullivan, who pleaded guilty, listened grimly while Laughlin called him a "self-branded thief" whose testimony was unworthy of belief.

Krouse closed for the Government by urging the jurors not to be distracted from the issue of Burko's alleged plot to steal the money.

Judge Casey commented on several phases of the Burko case testimony in statements yesterday. He said that Representative Hobbs entered the Edwards case only as counsel for the woman.

Judge Casey made public an excerpt from minutes of the Police Court judges' meeting last December 16, which said:

"No remarks made by me in connection with the Mattie Edwards case were intended to reflect on Judge Casey's integrity or to impugn that he violated his oath of office as a judge of this court. If the utterances attributed to me in any wise reflect upon Judge Casey's integrity or motives in his handling of this case, I regret their implications . . . (signed) Hobart Newman."

When Laughlin last week asked Casey if he were not absent from his job 106 days last year, the reply was not allowed, on the ground of irrelevancy. Casey issued a statement about this yesterday, saying the record showed that from January 1, 1940, to April 30, 1941, he was absent 68 days, including vacation and sick leave. The other judges, said Casey, in the same period were absent as follows:

Presiding Judge John P. McMahon, 42 days; Judge Newman, 134 days; Judge Neilson (appointed in May, 1940), 51 days.

Program Would Develop 2 Major Play Centers in N. E.

This is the fifth and concluding article in a series on a proposed plan of development of the District's recreation facilities.

By Lucia Giddens

Post Staff Writer

Development of two major recreation centers in the Northeast—one white and one colored—is visualized in the proposed $5,580,700 program for improvement of recreation facilities in the District.

Largest single item proposed for the Northeast is $226,100 for Langston Recreation Center, colored, at Twenty-fourth Street and Benning Road, where a cluster of schools and a large housing development already have pressed the partly completed play facilities into heavy use. Major portion of the funds there would be for a stadium to seat between 5,000 and 6,000.

The new Trinidad Recreation Center, now undeveloped, near the intersection of Bladensburg and Mount Olivet Roads Northeast, would be brought into concentrated service by the expenditure of $105,400 proposed in the plan. It could handle an anticipated annual attendance of 145,000 and would be a major center of that community's activities, said C. E. Robb, superintendent of grounds for the District recreation system.

A total of $633,300 for six recreation units in the Northeast is proposed in the program, drawn up by the Committee for the Coordination of Recreation Plans, of which Milo F. Christiansen is chairman. Since the program was indorsed by the Board of Education last week, recreation officials have been working to draw up a first and second restricted priority list of $500,000 each as a starter.

Indications are that attempts would be made in this priority listing to put more unused areas into service, by providing funds for grading and utilities, rather than to put a pretentious development at any one place.

If appropriations are made with dispatch, work on the "starter" projects could probably begin by July 1, Robb said. The entire program is planned for development over the next few years.

The Langston development would include $34,000 for stadium seating; $22,000 for grading, largely for the stadium, and $25,500 for field games and track there. For tennis courts and other play areas, $56,000 is proposed. The $11,000 figure for night lights would further increase the center's use. With these improvements, annual attendance is expected to rise from 191,300 to 478,100.

The Trinidad Recreation Center, known as the old Gude tract, will have to be cleared of old greenhouse to make way for its use. For grading alone, $39,500 is estimated, with $31,000 proposed for surfacing of courts and other areas. It is expected that school building developments in that vicinity will eventually provide indoor recreation facilities, so no field house is included in the present proposal.

At Eckington Recreation Center, adjacent to McKinley High School, Langley Junior High and Emery Elementary Schools, a $77,500 development is proposed, with $28,000 for surfaced areas.

At Rosedale Playground, at Seventeenth and Gales Streets Northeast, the $64,200 proposed includes $28,000 for a field house for indoor play space, showers and lockers, and for community meetings in the evening.

Sherwood Playground at Ninth and G Streets Northeast could double its annual attendance of 49,000 if the $56,700 worth of improvements were put in, it is estimated. The area of about 2 acres, taking the place of the old Plaza playground which was swallowed up in the development of the Union Station Plaza some years ago, is "small and poorly equipped, yet heavily used in a thickly populated district," Robb pointed out.

Improvements there would include $17,000 for a field house, and $28,000 for surfaced areas. The space is so small and so intensively used that the whole area may be surfaced. A coating of granulated cork, sand and asphalt—a mixture which has resiliency—may be used there more extensively than on any other of the District playgrounds, Robb said.

For Turkey Thicket Playground at Tenth Street and Michigan Avenue Northeast, a $103,400 item would cover a $39,000 field house and $22,500 for surfaced areas. Eight clay courts there would be surfaced; an area also would be surfaced for small children's play and another for older boys and girls. For field games and track, $5,600 is suggested for improvements there.

The proposed development program, based on land which has already been acquired, includes three units in the Southeast. They are:

Southeast Recreation Center, Thirteenth and D Streets Southeast, $13,800. It is now in use only for two summer months, with an attendance of 2,000. With $11,000 for surfacing, games could be played in other seasons as well, and attendance could mount to 50,000, it was estimated in the plan.

For Lincoln Playground, colored, at Sixth and L Streets Southeast, $34,900, including $17,000 for surfaced areas, is asked. Only dirt courts are there now.

Small Loan Bill Reported Out in House

A bill to legalize small loan businesses in the District was favorably reported to the House by the District Committee yesterday against the protest of a spokesman for loan companies in nearby Virginia.

The bill, as reported, would license companies to make loans in the District at maximum interest rate of 2 per cent a month on loans of $500 or less. The committee vote, in an executive session, was 11 to 2.

W. H. Cardwell, of Richmond, Va., legislative counsel for Virginia loan firms, declared that small loan companies, because of inherent risks in the business, cannot operate profitably at 2 per cent. Observing that the Virginia Legislature is considering reducing legal interest rate in that State from 3½ to 3 per cent, Cardwell suggested that the District rate also be made 3 per cent.

Cardwell suggested that a 2 per cent minium rate would permit loan sharks to continue to flourish here.

Without loan companies in the Virginia and Maryland suburbs, Cardwell declared, Washington today would be a "veritable paradise" for loan sharks. He said the Capital owes these companies a "debt" of gratitude."

Gilbert E. Hyatt, appearing before the committee as an interested Washington resident, asked the committee to consider a graduated interest rate scale on loans over $300.

In reporting the bill to the full committee, the subcommittee took into account "favorable" loan conditions here, Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, told the committee. Recent laws limiting interest to 2 per cent, Dirksen said, indicate that small loan companies have improved methods in handling loans.

Police Grill 3 in Slaying Of Dr. Simon

One Also Charged With Murder in Fatal Beating on Sunday Of James H. Scheck

Police last night held three colored men whom they have questioned, or will question, in connection with the fatal clubbing here last week of Dr. Heinrich Simon, German musicologist.

One of the men was George Baxter, 17, of 1103 O Street Northwest, who is charged with murder in connection with the slaying late Sunday of James H. Scheck, 33, colored, of 1400 Eighth Street Northwest. Scheck was beaten with brick at Seventh and Q Streets Northwest. Police said that Baxter appeared at the District Jail yesterday morning and gave himself up as Scheck's killer.

Implicated in Another Crime

Later in the day Baxter was implicated in another crime by one of two suspects detectives are grilling in connection with the Simon case. Police last night said the two men, 22 and 25, admitted to pulling a series of strong-arm jobs recently, and that one of the men said Baxter had helped him in one of them. This led detectives to decide last night to question Baxter in connection with Dr. Simon's death.

Police said the men admitted staging three strong-arm jobs in the Ninth Precinct, where they were caught, and four more in the Second Precinct.

Dr. Simon was assaulted near Seventeenth and Church Streets Northwest, which is on the border of the Second and Third Precincts.

Picked Up in Alley

The two men were picked up early Sunday as they ran down an alley in the 800 block of H Street Northeast. Private J. I. Beach, of the Ninth Precinct, trapped the pair at the other end of the alley. A short while later a man appeared at the station reporting he had been beaten up in the 600 block of H Street and he identified the prisoners as his assailants.

Police were believed also questioning the men in connection with an assault and attempted robbery of Dr. Arnold Werner Spanhoofd, 80, last March 16.

Dr. Spanhoofd, who was attacked near his home, 1624 Riggs Place Northwest, told police yesterday he was assaulted by two men. He said he could not tell if they were white or colored.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Red Sox are beginning to complicate the American League picture which had appeared to be a well-defined two-team contest for the pennant between the Cleveland Indians and the Yankees. The Red Sox, now the second-place club only 2½ games removed from the lead, have something neither the Indians nor Yankees own—the kind of hitting that can win a badly pitched ball game.

POVICH

When the Indians get one of these poorly pitched games by a staff member, the Indians are in sorry shape. Theirs isn't the kind of a hitting club that can overpower and offset their own bad pitching. Even the Yankees don't own the sort of power that can fetch free-scoring games from the fire. Boston is the power club of the league, and fortunate for the Red Sox that they are.

Without their power, Joe Cronin's team would be a hopeless sort because its pitching is flattered by the use of the word. The Red Sox need every ounce of their slug to combat their own pitching. The edge they have is that on the rare days when they do get a well-pitched game they are virtual shoo-ins. That is the edge the anemic-hitting Indians and the Yankees, to a lesser degree, don't have.

The Yankees are thus far the league's chief disappointment. Joe McCarthy's pitching has not been all that it was supposed to be. In fact, it is the worst Yankee pitching in modern Yankee history. None of the young phenoms in the Yankee training camp has startled anybody except in a negative sort of way, and Joe McCarthy has no great trust in his veterans.

Red Ruffing is both feeling and showing his 37 years. The same clubs he used to lick in a breeze are now rapping Ruffing around habitually. Lefty Gomez, who in the first two weeks of the season began to stir fancy visions of a comeback, has now fallen on evil times and can't win. He is beginning to look painfully like the futile Gomez of the past two seasons. Ernie Bonham, the best pitcher on the club last year, has come down with the miseries in his back and it's altogether a dreary picture that McCarthy's pitching presents.

Not too far distant from the Indians, in third place, are Jimmy Dykes' White Sox, not a very fashionable team, but a sort of threat at that. With his collection of cast-offs, minor leaguers, tradees and other bric-a-brac, Dykes has his team only three games back of the Indians, and it must command some respect. The White Sox own no outstanding feature except a habit of being tough.

Dykes' pitching could win the pennant for such as the Red Sox. Ted Lyons, Thornton Lee, Bill Dietrich and Johnny Rigney always give the White Sox a chance to win, at least keeping them in the ball game. Taft Wright, Luke Appling and Joe Kuhel can hit the ball briskly, and Mike Kreevich is again having a good year. Dykes seems to have come up also in an entirely adequate catcher in Mike Tresh. It is never a surprise when the White Sox win a ball game, but there is no down-the-line power of the type to delight Dykes.

The Tigers are a blighted ball club since the induction of Hank Greenberg into the Army, and Del Baker's pitching has not been all that he presumed it would be. It requires no great disaffection for the Tigers to count them out as repeating champions. They have less to recommend them than the Indians, Yankees, Red Sox and Chicago, much less.

The Red Sox are a shining example of the scarcity of pitchers who can win. Tom Yawkey, with all his millions, is helpless to remedy the situation at a time when the Red Sox could, conceivably, breeze in with some pitching help. The Red Sox's far-flung farm system has sent up nothing to Joe Cronin in several years, and in the American League there is not, unhappily for Yawkey, a club like the Phillies that will sell an accredited pitcher.

As a Washington pitcher was saying the other day, any pitcher should be lucky to find himself with the Red Sox. "If a fellow can't win with that club, he can't win at all. There are a half-dozen ordinary pitchers in this league who could win 25 games with the kind of batting help he would get from Boston's line-up. That's a pitcher's paradise."

The Red Sox's power is contained, of course, in the bats of Ted Williams, Jimmy Foxx, Joe Cronin, Dominic Di Maggio and Bobby Doerr. Only Di Maggio, of that group, cannot be classed as a home-run hitter, but Jim Tabor is always apt to knock somebody's pitch out of the lot. Even the Yankees can envy that sort of hitting, and the Indians, of course, would like to stage a little kidnaping exhibition against that Red Sox power.

Opportunity Knocks but Once, Buddy

Olney, Md., May 12.—Open letter to Buddy Baer.

Dear Buddy:

Just a note to you to ask you if you appreciate just how much material and spiritual wealth lies within your reach when you leave this pleasant training site on May 23 to go into nearby Washington and battle Joe Louis.

CONSIDINE

You are the biggest and strongest man ever to fight Joe Louis. The good Lord gave you more sheer power in your right-hand punch, and in the waves of back muscles which propel that punch, than He gave unto Louis' last four Bum-of-the-Month opponents combined.

If you go out there and clout Louis on the jaw with one punch that has everything you own in it, you'll knock the champion down so hard that you'll dislodge Mike Jacobs' store-teeth. Louis may get up, for he has a lot more courage than some have ascribed to him. But if he does, then it is within your constitution rights to knock him down again, and again.

Just think, man, you are within a few punches of a million dollars! Some of the punches you have wasted on sparring partners and less animate punching bags during your training session at Steve Cochran's Theater Farm (Incidentally, I never knew till now that they grow theaters) would have won for you the heavyweight championship of the world. Joe Louis is like any other fighter, except he is superior in skill. That is, he can be hit and hurt just as you have hit and hurt other men. It is up to you.

Here's Chance to Erase Smear From Name

This is your first and probably only chance to meet Louis. You're not as colorful as your older brother, so it isn't likely that you can be brought back time after time in matches that make you a perennial contender. Max could draw a crowd if he were boxing a crate of oranges. You must act now, or you're a goner. This can be no time for you to get sick of fighting, as you did the night you let that bum Gunnar Barlund slap you around like a child. This is for keeps, Buddy. And what vistas present themselves!

You are big enough, strong enough and can hit hard enough to lick any man in the world, kiddo. But you don't need me to remind you why you are being classed as just another Bum-of-the-Month and why you'll go into the ring against the smaller man a very long shot to win. The Baer name isn't a very distinguished one in boxing, Buddy. A lot of people think that Max quits when the going gets tough and that you, in a slightly less interesting way, also cannot stand the gaff.

You could erase all that, pal. You could eradicate a smear that will be on your name and Max's as long as boxing lasts. You could do it by wading into Joe, who hasn't been a very great fighter since the night he beat Tony Galento, and taking command. You could make the boys along Jacobs Beach stop calling you Caspar Milquetoast by utilizing even half the brute strength with which you are endowed. You could do yourself and your family's name a great turn by showing that you can take a punch—as you must, during the evening—and still feel like throwing back a better one.

Of course, Buddy, you realize that you are "made" for Joe. I went into the dressing room to see pal Joey the night he beat Tony Musto in St. Louis. He was primarily concerned with his sore hands that night, but next in his mind was wanting to know who had won the Buddy Baer-Galento fight. When he heard that you had won it, his eyes lighted up as if he had just gotten a message from the Income Tax bureau that a refund check was on its way. He said, "My, oh my. Won't it be nice to fight a fellow who stands up straight again." Musto, you

Archibald Decisions Jeffra, Regains Title

Jeffra Loses Third By Penalty, but Nearly Kayoes Foe in Fifth; Billy Banks Wins

By Al Hailey

The old Joey Archibald—the one who fought his way from a ham-and-egg fighter to world's featherweight champion only to lose his title in humiliating fashion—last night regained the Maryland-New York version of the crown with a spectacular 15-round upset of Harry Jeffra in Griffith Stadium.

A wildly-cheering crowd of 2,000—hardly one-third of the throng which sat in the ball park one night two years ago and watched Archibal, then champion, retain his title with a highly unpopular decision over Jeffra—saw Joey overcome 3-to-1 odds last night to win the first leg on the undisputed world championship.

It was a rough and tumble fight that ended with Archibald almost going down for the count under one of Jeffra's smashing left hooks to the chin. But when the shouting was over, it was Archibald by a 2-to-1 verdict.

Referee Dissents

Judges Bob Eller and Jimmy Sullivan were in perfect agreement, the former giving Archibald the decision by the narrow margin of one point and Sullivan scoring it for the diminutive challenger from Providence, 136 points to 130. Referee Eddie LaFond's slip called Jeffra the winner by two points, 137 to 135.

In winning his twenty-first fight in Washington in as many appearances Archibald struck a solid blow for freedom from the scorn of the detractors who had him listed as a washed-up fighter.

He made Jeffra come to him and when Jeffra rushed in he constantly set him back on his heels with a left that almost established permanent residence on the Baltimore champion's jaw.

But it was Jeffra who was always on the charge—in the last three rounds a desperate Jeffra who saw defeat staring him in the face so hard that he tossed sportsmanship to the winds and in the fourteenth knocked the wind out of Archibald when Joey came up off the ropes and extended both hands forward.

Jeffra was twice penalized for foul tactics—once in the fifth for a low blow and again in the thirteenth for hitting Archibald flush on the jaw when Archibald sank to one knee under Jeffra's charge.

Archibald Warned

The decision was greeted at the ringside by a spontanous outburst of heated debates over the decision. Although every round was close, Archibald was out in front by six rounds to four on The Post score sheet. This department threw out the point system, calling half a dozen for Joey, four for Harry and five even.

Archibald himself was warned for low blows in the eighth and eleventh rounds. It was in the ninth round that Archibald really began to find the range on Jeffra's jaw. Repeatedly he shot his left inside the ranger Jeffra's right hand—first looping it and then

Dutch Pitches Six-Hitter, Washington Power Explodes for Four Runs in Fourth

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

The spell of Dutch Leonard's knuckle ball overpowered the season-long hex held by the Athletics over the Washington club, and the Nats won a ball game yesterday. With a 5-1 victory over the A's, they reclaimed their modest sixth-place lodgings in the American League.

Leonard mesmerized the Athletics with some six-hit pitching and it was blended also with some power slugging by the Nats. Into the fourth inning they packed a sustained show of slug rarely identified with a Washington club, and came up with four large runs to wipe out a 1-0 deficit at that point.

Young Mickey Vernon barged into some sort of coheroism with Leonard when he banged the first home run to sail over the right-field wall at Griffith Stadium this season. It was an important and timely blow inasmuch as the A's were leading, 1-0, at the time. It was also a magnificent wallop, soaring over the fence in right center only a few feet from the scoreboard.

McCrabb Pounded

That homer by Vernon touched off five successive hits against young Lester McCrabb, late of Atlanta. The pivotal blow of the inning was Jimmy Bloodworth's three-bagger that missed going into the center-field seats by inches and was loaded with two Washington runs.

After a slight lapse in the second inning, when the A's scored their only run, Leonard was magnificent. He was pitching two-hit ball until the seventh, and gave up no other runs despite the presence of A's on base with none out in each of the last three innings. Over one four-inning stretch, from the second to the seventh, Leonard pitched hitless ball.

Cubs Blast Hurlers, Beat Reds, 12 to 1

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, May 12.—Behind Bill Lee's six-hit hurling, Chicago's Cubs did it again today, clawing out a 12-to-1 victory over Cincinnati today in the weirdest exhibition of sandlot baseball the still young season has produced.

Stan Hack, first up in the first inning, walked; Lou Stringer tripled him home and the big parade was on, to continue three innings.

In all, three world champion hurlers allowed 14 hits, served up 10 bases on balls, and one, Jim Turner, contributed one of his team's four miscues. Lee walked five, struck out two.

Pearson Called, Fails

Manager Bill McKechnie took the wraps off Monte Pearson, former Yankee, but wrapped him up again after one and a third innings.

Turner wasn't any more effective and before the "rout" was completed, the Cubs had sent 12 men to the plate, filled the bases five times and scored five—on two hits and an error.

Two more tallies were racked up in the third on loaded sacks and Bill Nicholson's single and in the seventh the visitors again found the range with four singles and a double, good for three runs.

Lon Warneke Holds Pirates, Cards Win, 6-2

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, May 12.—Veteran Lonnie Warneke, the Arkansas hillbilly with the bullwhip pitching arm, threw a seven-hit ball game today and the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates, 6-2, to sweep the two-game series.

Only Vince DiMaggio gave lean Lonnie trouble as the crafty right-hander sailed smoothly to his fourth triumph of the season. Vince robbed Warneke of a shutout by blasting out of the park in the fifth inning to score a runner ahead of him and he singled later. But Warneke had his revenge when he struck out DiMaggio to end the ball game in the ninth.

While Warneke was mowing down the Pirates, the Redbirds gave out with a persistent 13-hit assault. The Cards kept pecking away at Ken Heintzelman's left-handed shoots, scoring runs singly in the second, fourth, fifth and sixth innings.

After Heintzelman had been removed for a pinch hitter, the Cards collected their final two runs in the seventh off another southpaw, Dick Lanahan.

Warneke issued no walks and struck out three. Only 1,539 fans watched the Pirates drop their fourth straight game.

The victory inched the second-place Cards a half game closer to the league-leading Brooklyn Dodgers, who were idle today. One and one-half games now separate the contenders.

Boston Scores All Runs in First Three Innings to Win, 8-4; Gomez Is Chased

By the Associated Press

Boston, May 12.—The Boston Red Sox took a tighter hold on second place in the American League today by conquering the New York Yankees, 8 to 4, to give old Lefty Bob Grove the 295th victory of his major league career.

It was the fourth straight triumph for the Red Sox and moved them to 2½ games behind the idle Cleveland Indians.

The game brought together two of the leading left-handers in American League history, Grove and Vernon Gomez, of the Yankees, but while Grove groped his way slowly, steadily over the full nine-inning route, Gomez was pounded for all Boston's runs and departed at the end of three chapters.

Gomez walked two men in the first inning and Jimmie Foxx brought them home with his second home run of the season. Another walk and a double by Jim Tabor counted a run and a double error by Third Baseman Red Rolfe let in still another.

With two out in the second Ted Williams singled and Foxx walked. Then Williams raced to third on a wild pitch and came home on a passed ball by Buddy Rosar. In the third a walk, Dom DiMaggio's double and Stan Spence's single scored two more.

It made no difference that Marvin Breuer and Norman Branch held the Sox scoreless on three hits the rest of the way because Grove managed to keep the Yankees under control except for a wobbly third inning, when New York bunched four hits for three runs.

Rolfe started this uprising with a double, Charley Keller singled for one run, Joe Gordon doubled and Rosar singled for two tallies.

Grove tired in the ninth, after two were out. He walked two men and Manager Joe Cronin fumbled one of them home. Rosar beat out a hit to fill the bases, but Frenchy Bordagaray grounded into a force play.

Redskins Sign San Jose State Guard, DuBose

The Redskins continued their drive on San Jose State University yesterday by signing up the third of five players they hope for from that institution—Glenn Dubose, a guard.

Dubose, short and stocky, weighs 220 and is 5 feet 9. He played against the Redskins in 1939 as a member of the Treasure Island All Stars. At the same time, General Manager Jack Espey announced that LeRoy Zimmerman, triple threat back, has signed for his second year with the Skins.

Bob Titchenal, rookie center last year, already has agreed to terms. The Redskins are seeking Morris Buckingham and Deward Tornell, draftees, who, if they sign, will bring the San Jose delegation to the largest of any school on the squad.

Tigers Encounter Sid Hudson Today; Rick Ferrell Hurt

Out of the West come the Detroit Tigers today to open a series against the Nats at Griffith Stadium. Washington fans will be getting their first glimpse of a Western club this season.

Sidney Hudson, winner of his last two starts, will be seeking his third straight victory today. Hudson beat the Tigers with a six-hit performance in Detroit last week. Johnny Gorsica, winner over the Yankees in his last start, will pitch for the Tigers.

The Nats will be without the services of Rick Ferrell for several days as a result of a freak mishap in the sixth inning yesterday. Ferrell suffered a split finger on his throwing hand while catching a warm-up knuckle ball pitch from Dutch Leonard. No batter was in the box.

Bobo weighed 205 pounds to 191 for Dorazio.

Pennant Chances:

By Bob Considine

This is the second of a series of articles by Bob Considine, previewing the potential pennant winners of the 1941 baseball season.)

Ford Frick, president of the National League, should begin pricing high-speed cameras. For if ever his league had the makings of a photo finish, it promises to be in 1941. The champion Reds, the determined Dodgers and the surprising St. Louis Cardinals are the clubs concerned. You can forget the rest, so far as the pennant is concerned.

In the Southland it appeared that the Reds were going to be tougher than ever. They had picked up what looked like the remnants of a fine pitcher in Monte Pearson, and a little more punch in Jimmy Gleeson, who had led the 1940 Cubs in batting.

But off their early start they appear to have lost the thing that made them a superlative team in 1940: the ability to win the close ones. They won more than 40 games last season by one run, a tremendous feat. This year they've been losing more contests by one run than winning them by that margin.

Two of the three games they blew to the Dodgers in that stirring first meeting between the champs and the popular contender this season were decided by one tally. Paul Derringer then went on to Philadelphia and dropped his second game by a single run, a few days after the Dodgers nosed him out. None of this augurs well for a happy 1941 season for Bill McKechnie's outfit.

"We're a better ball club than this," McKechnie told us in the midst of the Reds' rout by the Dodgers in the first series between the clubs. "We're just not hitting a lick." That was putting it mildly. At the time the Reds didn't have a hitter in the first 20 National League batters. Their top batter was Eddie Joost, of whom little is expected in the way of prolonged punch. Frank McCormick, the club's powerhouse, was hitting in the .260's. And such important players as Bill Werber, Mike McCormick, Jimmy Ripple and Jimmy Gleeson were hitting under .200.

As for Pearson, McKechnie has decided that he will not be of any service until the hot weather sets in, and that he will be gotten rid of pronto, unless he comes through in a hurry, once the dog days begin. The one bright ray in the Reds' picture, as May begins to lengthen out, is the return of Johnny Vander Meer. He won two

Richmond Scores Nine Runs in 8th to Beat Colonials, 11-10

Late Rally Victimizes McGinnis

Spider Outfielder Starts on Mound, Lasts Until G.W.'s Uprising in Ninth

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., May 12.—A big eighth inning in which they scored nine runs enabled the University of Richmond Spiders to defeat George Washington's Colonials on Millhiser Field this afternoon, 11 to 10, for their sixth consecutive triumph.

Handicapped by a dearth of certified chuckers, the Spiders pulled Dick Humbert in from center field to do the hurling, and, although he had to be relieved in the ninth inning, he received credit for the victory.

The Colonials were leading, 7 to 2, when the Spiders uncorked their barrage in the eighth. Frank McGinnis, who had held the Richmonders scoreless since the first inning, when they pushed across two runs, pitched to only four batters, three of whom rapped him for singles. A fourth got to first on an error. At this juncture Red Kloak was called to the mound—just in time to be charged with the defeat.

Two runs had been scored when McGinnis left the ball game and seven more romped home as the result of singles by Wholey, Butcher and Woolard, a double by Fronczek, a base on balls and three errors.

That gave the Spiders an 11-to-7 advantage, which the Colonials all but erased in the ninth inning. Sokol scratched a single off Charlie Woolard's glove at third base and when McNeil hit an easy roller to Shortstop Locke he kicked the double-play ball all over the lot and both runners were safe. Then Picco hit a long drive into center field which went for a triple when Ned Butcher lost it in the sun. Locke relayed the ball wildly for his second error of the inning and Picco came home with the third run of the inning.

Dick Lunn Features Chevy Chase Practice

Former Champion Shoots 73, Plays 11th Hole in 2 Strokes; Women's Team Named

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Richard D. Lunn, who in 1933 won the District Amateur and Chevy Chase Invitation Championships, warmed up for the thirty-first renewal of the latter event yesterday with a practice round of 73, lowest of the day although half the starting field worked out over the perfectly conditioned layout.

Lunn's round included one of the few deuces ever scored on the 424-yard eleventh hole, a spoon shot which found the cup for an eagle while playing with Pro Bob Barnett, William Rapley and George L. Coleman, the Miami, Oklahoma threat.

Club members discussing the feat could recall only two other two's scored on the hole, one by Barnett and another by C. Ashmead Fuller, many-time club champion

Coleman, club champion at the Indian Creek Club in Miami, Fla., was around in 74 and he looms as the outstanding out-of-town entry.

A former champion from the host club, Ralph Quinter, jr., was among the late entries turned in yesterday which included Walter Pederson, president of a New York sporting goods firm; Craig McKee and C. A. Slater, jr., of Columbia; Frank Reeside and Dr. J. Lawn Thompson, of the host club, and southpaw Byrn Curtiss, Indian Spring.

Volney Burnett, the defending champion, played with D. C. Champion Ralph Bogart and Earle Skinker yesterday while Maryland State Champ M. Parker Nolan tested the layout as did Gene Pittman, John Brawner and Charley Malone, the big Redskin end, who finished each nine with birdies.

The course will be open for practice rounds again today, while tomorrow is qualifying day, with match play Thursday and Friday. The field will probably hit the 125 mark by tee-off time.

Mrs. Davy Releases Intercity Line-up

Mrs. Myron Davy, captain of the District Women's Golf Association's intercity team, which meets Baltimore tomorrow at 10 a. m., at Suburban, named the starting line-up yesterday, all positions according to handicaps. It will be the first of a home and home series. The teams split even last year.

Mrs. Davy, who returned yesterday from New Jersey where she resumed a series of lessons under Frank Walsh, will play in the No. 2 position with the top spot going to Mrs. T. F. Neblett, the newcomer with the collection of Southern titles. Mrs. Neblett is handicapped at one and Mrs. Davy two.

The remainder of the team in order, with handicaps: Mrs. W. R. Stokes, Manor (3), and Mrs. Leo Walper, Indian Spring (4); Mrs. Elizabeth Houghton, Chevy Chase (4), and Mrs. T. O. Brandon, Columbia (4); Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor (4), and Mrs. K. S Giles, Indian Spring (6); Mrs. L. B. Platt, Chevy Chase (7), and Mrs. Florence Godfrey, Congressional (8); Mrs. J. B. Patterson, Chevy Chase (9), and Mrs. F. W. Evans, Kenwood, (9). Baroness de Gruben and Mrs. Bert Gamble are alternates.

Mrs. Betty Meckley, who would ordinarily play in the No. 4 position, notified Mrs. Davy that she would be unable to compete while others on the eligible list unable to play are Mrs. Bishop Hill. Mrs. David Clark and Mrs. Y. E. Booker.

CONGRESSIONAL

Mrs. Herbert Weber and Mrs. C. J. Wilkinson tied in the Match Play Against Par Tournament yesterday at Congressional in the weekly ladies' day, each five down to par. Mrs. H. A. Knox and Mrs. P. J. Winkler finished in a tie for the next place, each seven down to regulation figures.

WASHINGTON

Ann Reh was the winner of the women's Tombstone Tournament at Washington Golf and Country Club, with Mrs. R. T. Hotze second. Third was a tie between Mrs. R. Harr and Mrs. W. W. Southworth.

Second team matches of the District of Columbia Women's Golf Association are scheduled today at Belle Haven. First and third teams idle until Friday.

FBI Slugs, Beats Treasury, 26 to 0

F. B. I. and Treasury nines, in the United States Government League, staged a slugging battle yesterday on the Ellipse—with the G-Men doing all the slugging.

They slugged two Treasury pitchers for 19 hits and a record 26-0 victory in a game which was mercifully called after five innings.

Bright hurled a one-hitter for F. B. I., but it was hardly necessary for the victory.

Andy Farkas to Talk On the Sports Digest

Andy Farkas, the Redskins' fullback who was hindered last year by a knee injury, will be interviewed during the "Sports Digest" over Station WWDC tonight at 6 o'clock. Andy will be interviewed on the highlights of his own football career and comment on the outlook for the Redskins next fall.

Western Bids For Interhigh Play-Off Berth

Strengthened by the return to its line-up of Jakke Hilleary, all-around sports star, the Western High nine will be favored to throw leadership in the interhigh baseball series into a three-way deadlock today as it faces Tech in one half of a double-header. Supplementing the battle at the McKinley diamond will be a Roosevelt-Wilson game on the field of the latter.

To date the Western nine, which hasn't had the regular services of hard-hitting Hilleary since 1939, due to his desire for a rest after football and basetball, has won two of his three games. Central and Eastern, the current leaders, own one more triumph apiece.

Contrary to the understanding of numerous coaches and officials of the annual public school race, this year's three-game championship series, starting May 29, will not be between winners of the Eeastern and Western divisions titles, as in football and baseball last season. The top two teams in the combined seven-team circuit will draw the playoff positions.

Thus a Western victory today, plus victories by the Red Raiders, Eastern and Central in the two remaining games on the schedule for each, will force a playoff to decide the two teams which will play off (if that's clear enough) for the title.

Roosevelt and Wilson, though retaining a mathematical chance to be in the final picture, will be playing mostly for the exercise today. The first is in fifth place with one win and two losses, while Wilson has won once and lost three times.

SCHOOLBOY SCHEDULE TODAY
Western at Tech (interhigh).
Roosevelt at Wilson (interhigh).
Central at Washington-Lee.
Rockville at Bethesda-Chevy Chase.
Laural at Montgomery Blair.

Smith Hurls, Terp Nine Beats W&L, 4-2

Bill England's Two-Run Homer in Third Proves Decisive in Opener of Road Trip

By the Associated Press

Lexington, Va., May 12.—Bob Smith, University of Maryland softball artist, held Washington and Lee batters in check today to give the Terrapins a 4-2 victory.

The Generals failed to hit in the pinches and left ten runners stranded on bases in the Southern Conference game.

Bob Gregerson, pitching his last collegiate game for Washington and Lee, was the victim of faulty support in the early innings. He allowed six hits and Smith seven.

The Terp infield performed well with catches of several hard drives from Washington and Lee bats.

A Washington and Lee rally in the night was cut short when Merle Duvall stabbed Bobby Gary's liner and ended the ball game by doubling Teddy Ciesla, who had walked, off first base.

The Terps left only two men stranded on base.

Eight Thirty Wins Toboggan Handicap as Belmont Opens

15,887 See 5-Year-Old Win Easily

Dr. Whinny Second, Doubt Not Third; Spanish Moss Takes Fashion Stakes Event

By Sid Feder

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, May 12.—The plain folks and the blue book boys and girls had their annual rubbing-elbows party today as beautiful Belmont Park opened its spring meeting, but the Wideners and the Whitneys enjoyed the show the most.

For George D. Widener's handsome Eight Thirty, one of the best of 1940, opened his 5-year-old campaigning with a smart victory in the ancient Toboggan Handicap, and Mrs. Payne Whitney's Spanish Moss, a neat-looking stretch-running filly, poked her nose in front in the Fashion Stakes for young ladies.

Since both of these were public choices in the betting, their victories also sat very well with the 15,887 who trekked out to Long Island for the unveiling of the new "face" they've put on this spacious racing plant since last fall's meeting.

Earned $81,450

From a turf standpoint, the most important development of the day was the showing of Eight Thirty. This aptly named son of Pilate and Dinner Time finished out of the money only once last year and won four of eight starts, for $81,450 in earnings. This year he is generally regarded as the horse to beat for the handicap championship.

And he showed why in his first 1941 outing today. His stablemate, Dr. Whinny, took over the lead at the half-mile and was still in front at the head of the stretch, as Harry Richards held Pilate's handsome son off the pace, back in third place.

But, as Dr. Whinny and Mrs. T. Christopher's Doubt Not battled heads apart, along came "Half Past Eight" on the inside to poke his way in front at the eighth pole and run off by himself, finishing the 6 furlongs in the snappy time of 1:11 1-5 and winning just exactly as a 7-to-10 shot should. His stablemate was second and Doubt Not third as Widener pocketed $5,275 as the winning purse.

Chiquita Mia Disappoints

In collecting the $6,950 winner's end of the Fashion Stakes, under Eddie (Whirlaway) Arcaro's usual classy riding, Spanish Moss let the other young ladies do all the early running. Then she came along to bob her head in front at the wire and nose out Jock Whitney's Banjo Eyes in 1:00 3-5, which went down in the books as a track record for the new 5-furlong chute.

Chief disappointment was the dismal showing of Lucky Charley Howard's Chiquita Mia, who brought a record of four straight victories into Belmont. She finished seventh in the eight-filly field, never once showing a lick of racing ability. Spanish Moss returned a favorite's price of $5.10 for each $2 ticket.

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

This country up here was never more beautiful than yesterday. It was such a pretty day that I heard a track regular say he could tear up a losing ticket, take a deep breath of the mountain air and feel like he was even. And listen, for years I have been kidding about installing flamingoes in the infield. Somebody put one over on me. Darned if they haven't imported a couple and stuck them in front of the odds board. I have a sneaky suspicion that they are artificial. Jockey George Watson, who weighed 122 last December, was riding at 114 pounds yesterday. Jockey "Pappy" Witmer showed up after a winter in Cuba. The less said about it, the better. And here it is Charles Town and no "Huppy" Davis. What's the story? I found everybody rarin' to go—Russell Oakes, Leeds Riley, Smokey, Willie Postal, Elmer Hathaway, Palmer Heagerty. If I could think of more names, I could end this paragraph. Conspicuous by his absence was Art (WOL) Brown, but he will be up today and he will stop by the Peter Pan for dinner. Brother (B. & O.) Cox puffed in on the race special with a monster opening-day train. Needless to say, he was smiling. Mooky and the rest of the Jack's green card boys put in appearance. They hope to have "pass outs" every day. By the way, a pass out is a card that has enough winners on it to be used for advertising purposes after the program. Besides Mooky, there's Abe, Ernie, Alabama Jack and Collie. Washington Jake is missing. He's gone to New York. Somebody stole his statue of Jockey Don Meade on Bimelech and Jake has gone up to track down the culprit. And Pork Chops hasn't put in appearance. See you on the rail. BILL.

First race—COQ ALANE has class enough to beat a field of maiden juveniles of this sort. Needs only the right ride. MISS RIPPON has worked well and will be a factor. LADY LONGWORTH for the minor award.

Second race—BRAIN CHILD likes this track and seems to have found a field that suits. SMALL CHANGE retains a flash of her class and should be close. PUSHKIN for the show end.

Third race—BLUE CYCLONE flashed speed on the big tracks and promises to make the most of the rail position in this. LAST SCAMP gets in light for this and will be close. WAR RUMOR may be third.

Fourth race—SCULLERY MAID gets in with a feather and showed enough in Maryland to warrant a top selection. TIME SCOUT and STRUMMING probably will take care of the others.

Fifth race—COMMANDERESS, a newcomer hereabouts, gets a good figure in this field and could be the right one. CLAY HILL was good around here last year. FUSIONETTE probably will make a money appearance

Sixth race—SCHLEY AL was prepared in major track races and will be hard to beat in this company. DOCTOR'S NURSE should be in the thick of contention. FRANK H. always has earned his way hereabouts.

Seventh race—CENTERVILLE seems to have a lock and key on this event. Likes the route and the opposition is cheap. BRIAR BLUE and STEPPIN' IN to fill out the money bracket.

Eighth race—SHAMBLES needs to be only a shadow of his real self to take care of this company. LYDE and WORTH OWNING seem to have something on the others.

Best bet—CENTERVILLE.

Charles Town, W. Va., May 12.—Ideal racing weather, a fast track and a crowd of 5,000 was the order as racing returned to this historic section today.

Six fast sprinters marched postward in the Inaugural Handicap and the best of the lot at the conditions were Berwyn, a 5-year-old acquired at Bowie this spring by R. C. Waple, of Falls Church, Va. Berwyn took command in the opening strides and held sway throughout the test of 6½ furlongs, to lead Mrs. Tom Lewis' Purport to the wire by 3½ lengths. Third money went to Capt. Ewart Johnston's Royal Business.

Berwyn was installed the favorite and paid a $4.80 mutuel. Royal Business, the "queen of smaller tracks," was a hotly-backed second choice but her first start of the year found her unable to carry on with her usual stretch punch. Berwyn was clocked for the route in 1:20, one second over the track record set by Here Goes.

Jockey Willie Kelly, something of a champion hereabouts last year, was in Berwyn's saddle. The Westwick gelding proved a tough customer to Starter Morrissey. He wheeled all over the track and was finally backed into the starting gate after much urging. However, once the racing began, Berwyn was all business. He scampered to the front, saved ground and was not seriously threatened at any stage.

Both Purport and Royal Business came from far back to make their moves but there was no catching Berwyn today. The Waple colors rippled along in front and Berwyn seemed master of the situation, despite his top assignment of 115 pounds.

The meeting opened with a $60.40 shot when E. Lind's Happy Sis took the shortest way home along the rail and defeated Mr. Jim, the heavily played favorite, and six others. But public choices took over both ends of the daily double. Miss Maker, paying a mere $3.40, won the second race, and Vendor's Lien, a $5.20 shot, accounted for the third race. A $7.80 daily double was cashed by 594 customers.

Jeffra Loses To Archibald In Title Fight

Jeffra won the last two rounds with a last-stand attack, but it was too late. Although that verdict Joey won over Jeffra in 1939 here was unquestionably a bad decision, last night's victory made it two-out-of-three for him over the Baltimorean and avenged the defeat he suffered at the hands of Jeffra in Baltimore. Archibald now stands ready to fight Petey Scalzo, the National Boxing Association champion, for the undisputed title.

In the fifth it looked as if it might be all over for Archibald when Jeffra nailed him with a smashing overhand right on the jaw that brought a beclouded expression to the challenger's eyes.

But Joey came back in the sixth and slammed across another of those left hooks to Harry's jaw that made Jeffra shake his head to clear it. Joey chased Harry all over the ring with a two-handed attack but was forced to back up in the closing seconds when Jeffra opened up with a body attack which forced him into the ropes.

Jeffra took the lead in the seventh round after running into a smashing left hook flush on the chin. He tore into Joey with both hands, smashing across a right that snapped Joey's head back and then driving in with a body attack which left Joe's body a beet-red color. He backed Joe into the ropes with that meat-cleaver right, but then took a hard left hook on the chin. At that point it looked like anybody's fight.

Banks Extended

Billy Banks, 132½, the U Street fashion plate, won the hard way in the night's first six-rounder over Joey Stack, 127½, of Philadelphia. Billy suffered a severe attack of body punishment but was too clever for the Philadelphian. Referee Charley Reynolds penalized Banks a round for low blows and at the end Billy took a terrific punch in the solar plexus that almost stopped him.

The myth that was Jabo Kenner, 215-pound Washington colored puncher, was thoroughly exploded by a hit-and-run wrestling addict from Baltimore, Jim Swimmer, 203, in the night's second six, which ended with both boys falling through the ropes and indulging in a free-for-all brawl on the ring shoulder. They were finally separated and Kenner acclaimed the winner by a decision. Swimmer made Kenner look like a stumblebum and in the sixth actually punched the colored behemoth all over the ring. Kenner was being built up as a knockout terror.

In the eighth round semifinal Pedro Hernandez bolo-punching Puerto Rican stablemate of Archibald, out-maneuvered a game Henry Hook to take the decision, which was greeted with a round of boos.

G.U. Prep Golfers Beat Bladensburg may recall, followed the Arturo Godoy fashion and fought Joe from a squat-tag crouch.

You're so tall that if you tried to crouch all you would be doing was bringing your chin down within better firing range. So you'd better not try to ape the apes. They have been giving Joe a lot of trouble with their stooping antics. Joe is afraid he'll crack a hand on the top of their thick skulls. But, don't you see, Buddy, the men who have fought Joe this way had no idea of hurting him, or even of winning the fight? They just wanted to stay in there with him for a length of time. That's not your kind of fight. You were built to go out there straight up, measure a guy and let him have it. I'm sorry to say that you haven't done it very often, though they tell me you did it against Galento.

You looked better against Abe Simon than Joe did. Big Abe folded under your punches in three rounds, but it took Louis 13 to crumple him. That should do something to you, spiritually. And I think that what you need is a spiritual lift, for who in the history of boxing ever had more physical equipment than you? So I thought I'd drop you this note to freshen your mind on a few items. In your case it seems to be "The flesh is willing but the spirit is wanting." If you can't get up a little fire and brimstone at the thought of making a million bucks, and of atoning your name's ill-favor, then you're hopeless. Good luck. BOB CONSIDINE.

Pennant Chances:

ball games with performances which brought back memories of his 1938 form. And when that modest streak was ended it was ended only by a last-minute home run barrage off Dodger bats—Vander Meer having had a shutout victory in his grasp as late as the eighth inning of the game concerned.

We still like the Reds—but theirs will be a season of headaches, at best. If they get home for their third straight pennant it will be by the margin of the fuzz on the skin of their teeth. In 1940 they won by a 12-game margin over a Dodger outfit that had not yet found itself and one which was gutted with serious injuries. Lightning and bean balls rarely strike twice in the same spot. Last year Medwick, Casey and Reese, of the Dodgers, were laid low by skull pitches. It isn't likely that this can happen again in 1941.

The dizzy pace set by the Reds in the last half of the 1940 season was quietly equaled by the spurt of the Cards. It was quietly done because the Cards were going no place except from deep in the second division to third spot.

Now the 1941 season so far sees no abatement in the Cardinal pace. They were off from the barrier as if catapulted, and were boosted along at undiminished speed by the pitching of Rookie Pitchers John Gornicki, John Brodnicki and Sam Nahem, plus old Lon Warneke, whose shoulder somehow manages to remain hinged.

It remains to be seen what will happen to the Cardinals' rookie pitchers and the club's red hot rookie second baseman, Frank Crespi, as the season lengthens. National League batters will have a better idea of what's in the pitching kits of Manager Billy Southworth's kid pitchers the next time they see them. And rival pitchers will know a little more about how to cool off Crespi.

The Reds must soon come to the realization that the National League is no longer their oyster. If they're going to win again they must stop losing ball games in which Derringer allows only four hits, their fielding must improve and they must either shelve or resuscitate Ernie Lombardi, who is slower than ever, if possible, and whose batting average was threatening to go down under an abysmal .100 when this was typed.

McKechnie is a genius for bringing clubs out of funks such as the Reds fell into at the start of 1941 hostilities. And he'll have to be a genius, and nothing short of one, if he is going to spur his oar-resting club into enough fervor to keep it ahead of the fighting attack of the stable Dodgers (who have almost everything a title team needs) and a St. Louis team which has the violent ambition of youth.

Devitt Prep Wins by 19-6 Behind Cullen

With Bob Cullen, its crack right-hander, pitching hitless and runless ball for three innings, Devitt Prep defeated Georgetown Prep, 19-6, yesterday for its ninth baseball victory in 14 games. The game was called at the end of the sixth.

Cullen fanned seven of the nine men he retired, and then turned the pitching over to Madden, who gave up all of the Little Hoyas' four hits.

Landon Nine Wins, Uncovers Good Hurler

John Sager, regular Landon School third baseman, took a turn at pitching yesterday and emerged from a local rivalry with Friends School with an 8-5 decision, the result of a 6-hit mound performance.

Sager fanned 11 opposing batsmen and allowed only 5 bases on balls in the 7-inning battle. He added the sixth victory to Landon's record in 7 games.

Though the winners scored three times in the first frame, they reserved their best hit for the second. First baseman smacked a three-bagger then with a mate on base to put Landon ahead, 5-1.

D. Smith, Friends hurler, was touched for 11 safeties, though he struck out 8.

Dark Horse Advances at Friends Net

Bob Miller, dark horse from Calvin Coolidge, continued his quest of the Sidwell-Friends School Interscholastic Tennis Tourney title yesterday, ringing up a smashing 6—0, 6—0 verdict over the host school's Alvin Dulcan to gain the finals.

Miller played flawless tennis, remaining on the defensive for the most part but breaking out with a sizzling drive wnen needed most. He was content to let his foe make points for him. At one time he banged back 14 of Dulcan's returns before the latter hit one into the net.

Today Miller's opponent in the finals Wednesday will be decided when Defending Champion Bobby Bensinger, of Friends, faces Roosevelt's Ben Fisher in the second semifinal at 3:30. Bensinger will be a strong favorite.

In the boys' section of play, restricted to prep schools, two semifinal matches are on today's card. James Harrison, of Episcopal, faces Cotton Smith, of Friends, and Harrison's teammate, William Hodge, squares off with Landon's Fred Garlock.

Brewers Beat Cameo in Post League Game

Proving their championship caliber the hard way—by coming from behind—the Heurich Brewers yesterday hung a 9-6 beating on their chief Washington Post-Industrial League rival, Cameo Furniture, in a seven-inning game on the Monument Grounds.

Held to a 9-9 tie by the Furnituremen in the opening game of the season, the Beermen yesterday overcame a 5-2 deficit to retain their undefeated status in the league. Big Ed Colliflower started shakily but wound up with a seven-hit game, contributing to his own cause with a triple in the second inning.

With Tommy Hahn facing Colliflower at the start, both teams scored once in the first inning. Heurich pushed across another tally in the second, but Cameo came right back with four of its own. The big blow of the period was contributed by "Booty" McQuinn with the bases loaded, a home run far over Centerfielder Barry's head.

That gave Cameo its 5-2 lead, but it didn't last long. Barry's ground-rule double to start the third, followed by a free pass to Cabell, Knight's single and successive Cameo errors on balls hit by Hershberger and Collier accounted for four Brewer runs and put them ahead for good. They scored once more in the fourth and twice in the sixth to effectively nullify Cameo's one-run rally in the seventh.

Hahn gave up all of Heurich's ten hits before giving over to Deavers to start the seventh.

W. & L. Defeats Anacostia, 7-2; 11th Victory

Fresh from victories over Fredericksburg (Va.) High and the Georgetown U freshmen over the weekend, Washington-Lee High's diamonders added another triumph to their string yesterday when they tripped Anacostia, 7-2, on the Arlington diamond.

A four-run uprising in the fifth inning broke a 1-1 deadlock yesterday and started the Little Generals toward their eleventh triumph in 16 games. Pitcher Doswell Olson was credited with his fourth straight victory with a seven-hit effort, during which 11 strikeouts were recorded.

A newcomer to the Arlington squad, Don Druckenmiller, paced the eight-hit attack of the winners. He registered a single, double and triple in four times at the plate. Three Anacostia errors and a hit batsman hurt the chances of Hurler John Penn considerably.

Dixie Pinmen's Set of 1,872 Believed Tops

Dixie Tavern pinmen, of the Prince George County League, rolled what is believed to be an all-time Class B team high in Washington City duckpin annals last night, a 1,872 set which featured the tournament's continuation at Lucky Strike. Everett Browning had 396 and Hugh Waldrop 395.

Brookland Postoffice, paced by Art Kleisath, went into third place in Class B with a 1,797 count. Kay Lowery's 385 set moved him into the Class D singles lead. He represents the Saturday Night League.

but their scoring for the day was done at the end of the second inning, in which singles by Johnson and Siebert, the latter's a perfect hit-and-run swat to right, and Sam Chapman's long fly gave them a 1-0 lead.

The Nats didn't have a hit, in fact, until they scored their first run. McCrabb breezed easily through the first three innings when all of a sudden, in the fourth, the Nats began to get obstreperous.

Vernon's homer was the opening shot, and then the Nats went townward. Buddy Lewis singled to left, and League Leading Hitter Travis banged a double to center. With two on base, Jimmy Bloodworth contributed his three-bagger against the center field wall and the Nats had three runs for the inning. They had a fourth when Chapman walloped the fifth successive hit off McCrabb, a single to center.

Sun Helps Nats

It was a beautiful sunlit day, and the Nats are obliged to that fact in the case of their fifth run. It spawned from a Texas Leaguer off Cramer's bat which Left Fielder Bob Johnson lost in the sun. The ball eventuated as a cheap double, and Cramer scored ultimately on Vernon's sacrifice and Lewis's lusty fly ball to right center.

Leonard was forced to bear down to hold the A's scoreless in the last three innings. In the seventh, McCoy led off with a single to left, but was abandoned there. In the eighth, Hayes opened with a double to left and moved to third on Brancato's fly but with one out he was stranded. Pinch Hitter Eddie Collins, jr., lofted a short fly to Cramer and Hayes was forced to hold third, and Suder hoisted a harmless fly to Case.

In the ninth, Moses led off with a double into the right field corner and a run appeared to be in the making. McCoy flied to Cramer, and Johnson singled sharply to left, but Moses held up at third. Siebert fouled out to Vernon and Buddy Lewis sealed Leonard's victory with a brilliant pick-up and throw on Sam Chapman's fierce grounder. The Nats were pretty good yesterday.

3 'Outsiders' Named to N.Y. Market Board

New York, May 12.—The New York Stock Exchange, in what was interpreted as a "vote of confidence," today elected Robert L. Stott, one-time clerk, chairman of its board of governors.

Stott and his ticket were unopposed. A total of 763 of the 1,375 members cast ballots, making the vote heavier than expected. Elected with Stott were 12 new governors.

Allan H. Crary, of Los Angeles; Charles C. Renshaw, of Chicago, and James J. Minot, jr., of Boston, were elected governors from outside the New York area.

John A. Coleman, Charles K. Cook, Henry Upham Harris, Joseph Klingenstein, John K. Starkweather, William K. Beckers, Francis T. Ward, Albert H. Gordon and Richard F. Teichgraeber, all members of New York firms, also were elected governors.

Stott brings to the chairmanship 23 years of experience in dealing with securities and a thorough knowledge of market technique. His selection is expected to complement the administrative knowledge of the exchange's newly chosen paid president, Emil Schram, now head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Brokers hope that working together Schram and Stott can kick a little life into the slumbering market.

Stott will have about a month to work out his ideas, admittedly indefinite now, as Schram isn't expected to take office before mid-June.

He is known to favor wider use of advertising to stimulate market activity, to tell prospective customers when "bargains" are available, much as a retail merchant does.

New Trading Plan Offered

New York, May 12 (AP).—George P. Rea, president of the New York Curb Exchange, today advanced a tentative plan to bring business back to New York's second largest securities market which, along with the "big board," has lately been suffering a decline of transactions.

The over-the-counter dealer market has ben taking much business from both listed exchanges because of the wide spread between buyers' and sellers' prices in the organized markets.

Rea's idea contemplates, especially for stocks where prices of buyers and sellers are far apart on the trading floor, a method by which those wishing to offer for sale may cause to be printed on the stock tape an offering price less a concession to dealers throughout the country. Thus by giving to nonmember dealers an extra profit, Rea believes he can encourage them to find buyers.

Similarly, dealers, seeing a stock they feel cheap, could offer to buy, less a concession for their efforts. This, said Rea, would give them an incetnive to find takers.

McCormick's Son Made President Of Int. Harvester

Chicago, May 12 (AP).—Fowler McCormick today was chosen president of International Harvester Co., huge agricultural implement concern, carrying into the third generation a family tradition of personal participation in the business founded by Cyrus Hall McCormick, his grandfather.

The announcement was made by the new president's father, Harold F. McCormick, chairman of the board of directors.

Selection of the new president came as a result of a shift in executive positions in filling the vacancy caused by the recent death of Addis E. McKinstry, who had been chairman of the executive committee. Sydney G. McAllister, who has been president, was moved up to chairmanship of that committee.

The shift in executive positions will be effective Thursday. Directors reelected Maurice F. Holahan as first vice president.

Iron Deposits of Lorraine, Coal of West Poland Are Vital Additions to Puffed Reich Economy

Tentacles Entwine Big Bread Basket Of the Lowlands

(This is the second of a series disclosing the booty Nazi Germany has won in overrunning 14 European nations to date.)

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser
International News Service Staff Writer

Through treaties, bloodless diplomatic victories and military occupation, the Third Reich has sought to emerge from its status as a "have not" nation and to become indubitably a "have" country.

Spreading its tentacles across the map of Europe, Hitler's Germany, in assembling an alleged "New Order," gained not only prestige in terms of power politics but also tangible industrial tools, iron, copper, zinc and bauxite resources and a larger bread basket.

These basic material things, wrought into mechanized symbols of military and economic fortitude by human muscles and by modern power equipment, represent Hitler's attempt to redeem the promises of a new grandeur made to the German people in "Mein Kampf" by this one-time Austrian house painter.

The Poland Grab

In the wartime loot, the iron deposits of Lorraine and the coal resources of western Poland were especially vital additions to the expanded Reich's economy.

Prior to the regaining of Alsace-Lorraine, Germany was largely dependent on foreign sources of iron ore, namely, from Spain and Sweden. Lorraine and Austria brought not only iron ore but Northern France, Belgium, Luxembourg and Czecho-Slovakia also yielded modern and well-equipped steel mills, which significantly augmented Germany's capacity, bringing it up to half that of the United States and making it an unquestioned second internationally in the barometric iron and steel industry.

The occupation of Northern France, translated into terms of material resources, brought fabulously rich boodle in the iron-ore deposits in Lorraine and also in the Briey and Longwy basins, which as a group constitute one of the richest reservoirs of this basic ore in the world. France in 1937 produced almost 38,000,000 tons of iron ore and exported about half.

The Austrian Spoils

Earlier the Reich got its hands on the iron-ore deposits of the Erzberg in Styria, Austria. Before German absorption, this lesser region produced 2,000,000 tons of ore a year. From the standpoint of accessibility to Germany and proximity to coal, the deposits in Lorraine, which are many times larger, are of course much more important.

Western Poland's most strategic contribution to the wartime economy of the new United (captive) States of Europe was coal. Poland has other mineral resources, especially zinc, and an important metal-working industry in Silesia.

Whereas Belgium and Luxembourg were valuable chiefly for their heavy industries, the Netherlands, like Denmark, was valuable as a supply center for foodstuffs. Holland is an important producer of vegetables and dairy products. Denmark supplies meat, dairy products and eggs.

Rich French Loot

And, speaking of aluminum, the raw material for it, namely, bauxite, is richly available in France, and also to some extent in Hungary and Yugoslavia. The latter country also produces copper, lead, zinc and chrome. Newly occupied Greece, like Yugoslavia, also produces about 50,000 tons a year of chrome out of an estimated total German annual consumption of 400,000 tons.

Rumania is, of course, strategically important as an oil producer. Shut off from important lanes to world sources of petroleum, Germany has, it is understood, undertaken to make up the deficiency through a process of hydrogenation of coal.

In giving a clew to the pattern of the "New Order," Dr. Walter Funk, Reich minister of economics and president of the German Reichsbank, indicated that after the war, assuming as he does, a German victory, Europe will be regarded as an economic unit, though not necessarily a free trade area.

It is contemplated that the industrialized areas adjacent to the old Reich will be brought within the Nazi customs and currency system, and that certain other European countries, nominally retaining independent tariffs systems, will be tied to the Nazi economy through trade agreements. Germany also intends to be the financial center for clearing payments in settlement of trade balances among European nations. It is already acting in that capacity for Italy, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Yugoslavia and Switzerland.

According to the Funk plan, currencies of captive nations will have a fixed relationship to the German reichsmark, and hence to one another.

Scoreboard of Hitler's Spoils

A scoreboard recording Hitler's gains in Europe discloses the overrunning of 14 European countries and the bringing of at least three others within the German orbit. The subjoined table lists the new groupings and compares the Nazi conquests in respect to area, persons available for gainful employment and electric power with data for the United States of America and also with Soviet Russia.

Steel Output Rate in Week Leaps to 99.2%

By the Associated Press

New York, May 12.—The steel mills of the United States will be turning out metal this week at a rate of 99.2 per cent of capacity, a gain of 2.4 points over last week's rate, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today.

At the new rate, mills will be within .6 of 1 per cent of the year's highest rate, reached in March but later cut due to the coal production

A month ago the rate was 98.3 and a year ago 70 per cent of capacity.

Shipments Set Record

New York, May 12 (AP).—Shipments of finished steel products by subsidiaries of United States Steel Corporation, regarded as an index of national defense production, now are at the highest level ever attained, corporation figures indicated today.

Shipments in April were announced as the greatest for that month in history, making the output of steel in the first four months of this year also the highest recorded.

The April output was 1,687,674 tons, compared with 1,720,366 in March (the greatest single month on record) and 907,904 in April, 1940. The previous April peak was 1,167,302, established in 1929.

During the first four months of this year, 6,638,945 tons moved out from mills, compared with 3,994,657 in the like 1940 period and 5,976,020 in the first four months of 1929, the previous top production.

Gasoline Prices Rise in Month

New York, May 12 (AP).—The American Petroleum Institute reported today the average retail price of gasoline, exclusive of taxes, in 50 United States cities on May 1 was 13.11 cents a gallon, an increase of .69 of a cent from April 1 and .20 of a cent above May 1, 1940.

The average dealer price was 9.40 cents a gallon as compared with 8.78 cents on April 1 and 9.24 cents on May 1, 1940. The lowest recent price, except for a dip during 1932, was 8.46 on December 1, 1940.

Meanwhile, advances of one-half cent to 1 cent a gallon in prices of Pennsylvania lubricating oils as a result of heavy demand were announced today. Neutral oils and bright stocks were raised 1 cent and some grades of cylinder oils were boosted one-half cent.

U. S. Building 800 Vessels, Survey Shows

By the Associated Press

New York, May 12.—The American Bureau of Shipping reported today that 800 ships, aggregating 5,055,400 gross tons, were under contract or being constructed in American shipyards May 1.

That total equalled approximately 80 per cent of the 5,961,044 tons of shipping the British admiralty has reported lost in the war thus far by British, their Allies, and neutrals. The British total includes 1,443 ships, however, making the average ship lost smaller than the average ship under construction or contract in this country.

Triples Tonnage Loss

The bureau's figure was more than three times the tonnage reported lost by British, their Allies and neutrals so far this year—1,617,359 tons, 368 ships.

The figure was a jump of 194 vessels of 1,623,305 tons from the April 1 total. The bureau said that on May 1, 1940, the comparable figures were 276 vessels totaling 1,349,385 tons.

The majority of the ships were for the Maritime Commission which has ordered 582 vessels of 4,519,168 gross tons, including 312 "emergency" cargo vessels of 2,246,400 tons, sometimes referred to as "ugly ducklings."

Also in the Maritime Commission's order are 72 tankers which were ordered during April.

496 Cargo Vessels

The American Bureau of Shipping said that of the May 1 total 718 vessels were to be self-propelled and the remaining 82 would be non-propelled.

The bureau broke these figures down into the following groups: 496 cargo vessels of 3,466,480 tons; 142 tankers of 1,354,260 tons, and 24 passenger vessels of 214,400 tons.

It reported that the rate of launching and delivery has accelerated, with the total on May 1 this year 27 vessels of 221,000 gross tons, compared with 16 ships of 107,260 gross tons in the same period of 1940.

New York Cotton

New York, May 12 (AP).—Cotton futures slanted down 10 to 13 points today under hedge and commission house selling.

Buying activities were held in restraint by Agricultural Secretary Wickard's plea to commodity exchanges for voluntary action to prevent undue speculation and booming prices.

Trade sentiment was buoyed by the New York Cotton Exchange's estimate placing domestic consumption of raw cotton in April at 935,000 bales, a record total, against 854,000 in March and 623,000 in April, 1940.

Exports Saturday, 577 bales; season so far, 910,138. Port receipts, 13,177. Port stocks, 3,364,887.

Stock Market Swings Irregularly Lower; Oil Issues Buoyant on Rising Prices

New York, May 12.—Aside from scattered oils, utilities and aircrafts, stocks generally slipped a notch or so in today's market when it became evident at the start there was little inclination to follow through on Saturday's rally.

While selling never was urgent, bidding also was of the timid sort and, at the close, the Associated Press average of 60 issues was off .2 of a point at 40, a concession of just one-half of the weekend upturn. Transfers amounted to 435,320 shares compared with 397,30 last Friday.

Intensification of the British and German air bombings aroused some nervousness in the financial sector, brokers said, and inspired cashing in here and there on last week's recovery. A slump on the Tokyo stock exchange was blamed on rumors the United States was about to enter the European conflict.

Considered in board rooms was a good increase in this week's estimated steel mill operations. An offset, though, was word from defense authorities that a second 20 per cent cut in 1942 model automotive output was a "distinct possibility" as demand for armament materials and plant capacity supersedes normal motor car manufacturing.

Underwriters offered a 20,000-share bloc of Crucible Steel common "over the counter" after the close at 38⅛, the quotation at which this stock finished on the "big board." It was off seven-eighths of a point on the day.

Norfolk & Western tumbled 4 points to 194, a new year's low, on a small turnover. On the offside fractions to a point or more were U. S. Steel, Youngstown Sheet, General Motors, Chrysler, Santa Fe, Great Northern, U. S. Rubber, Westinghouse, Depont, Anaconda, American Smelting and Western Union.

Consolidated Oil edged into new high ground for 1941. Oils were aided by rising prices for crude and gasoline. Others finishing moderately ahead were Pure Oil, Texas Corporation, Standard Oil of New Jersey, North American, Public Service of New Jersey, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft and Montgomery Ward.

Bonds were mixed and recently strong commodities irregularly lower. Wheat at Chicago was off 2⅜ to 2¾ cents a bushel and corn down ¾ to 1⅛. Cotton lost 50 to 65 cents a bale.

Among gainers in a spotty curb were Babcock & Wilcox, Aluminum of America, Bell Aircraft, Glen Alden Coal and Republic Aviation. Declines were posted for Humble Oil, Gulf Oil and Pantepec. Volume here was around 68,000 shares vs. 65,000 Friday.

Contrary to the usual practice of radio's night-time dramatic shows, "First Nighter," which you hear over WJSV every Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock, will keep the doors of its "Little Theater Off Times Square" wide open all this summer, presenting its usual original playlets just as if there were no vacations.

But that won't be as hard on the program's two constant stars—Barbara Luddy and Les Tremayne—as it seems. For while the show will continue, you'll have the rare experience of hearing it without Tremayne on June 17 and 24, while he takes a couple of weeks off. And then from July 15 to July 29, Miss Luddy will do the same.

You'd think that working 50 weeks a year, as they do in the dramatic medium, Tremayne and Miss Luddy would try to get away from it all for their brief summer holidays. But there must be something about acting that gets in the blood and won't let you get away from it for even that amount of time.

Tremayne, for instance, has contracted to perform the principal role in a religious pageant, "A Broken Idol," being given at Marshallton, Iowa, June 23, 24 and 25. Miss Luddy is to spend her vacation visiting Eastern summer stock company productions, and she's let it be known that she may appear in one of two of them.

It seems pretty wonderful to love one's work so.

B'nai B'rith Celebrants Hear Rayburn

More than 800 delegates to the annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 5, B'nai B'rith, last night celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their organization with a dinner at the Willard Hotel.

Speaker Sam Rayburn, of the House of Representatives, discussed off-the-record his views on the world crisis. Stating he had been offered the facilities of the radio to broadcast his speech, Speaker Rayburn declared he chose to wait until after President Roosevelt had expressed his views in a forthcoming talk to the Nation before making public his own ideas.

Henry Monsky, president of the Supreme Lodge of B'nai B'rith, told the gathering:

"When we speak of discipline and self-restraint, we have in mind that careless utterances are always dangerous, but they are especially so when the instruments of propaganda operated by the enemies of our present-day civilization seize upon every indirect word to damn us and to make our way harder."

He emphasized that "the price of freedom is sacrifice—sacrifice on the part of all of us, sacrifice on the part of labor, on the part of capital, on the part of those in high places and those in low places."

Joseph A. Wilner presided.

Edward Rosenblum, executive director of the Jewish Community Center and member of the District Defense and Welfare Council, was elected president at the convention session yesterday.

Other officers elected included Judge Emanuel Lewis, of Savannah, Ga., first vice president; Sol Fass, of Portsmouth, Va., second vice president; Hyman Rubin, of Columbia, S. C., third vice president; Julius Fisher, of Roanoke, Va., secretary, and Maier Triest, of Charleston, S. C., treasurer.

Abe Shefferman, of Washington, past president of the Grand Lodge, was elected Washington representative on the general committee of the organization.

Rosenblum, who succeeds Isaac Levin, of Miami, was one of the organizers of the local Young Men's Hebrew Association and is prominent in Jewish activities here.
